LOVE AND JEALOUSY IN JARNAGIN TRAGEDY MOTIVES FOR POISONING!

Letters to Other Woman Than His Wife Found in Dead Man's Trunk, Apparently Opened and Read by Her--Police at Work on Theory That Poison in Their Food Killed the Boston Couple in Their Chicago Home--Relatives Talk of Murder.

LOVE LETTERS WRITTEN BY EDWARD JARNAGIN TO A WOMAN OTHER THAN HIS WIFE, THE POSSIBLE INSANE JEALOUSY OF MRS. JARNAGIN, AND OTHER STRANGE CIRCUMSTANCES CONNECTED WITH THE MYSTERIOUS DEATH OF THE YOUNG BOSTON COUPLE IN THEIR FLAT AT NO. 1,332 DAKIN STREET, CHICAGO, ARE TO BE LAID BEFORE A CORONER'S INQUEST IN THAT CITY THIS AFTERNOON, IN THE HOPE OF FINDING SOME REASONABLE EXPLANATION OF THE DOUBLE TRAGEDY, ACCORDING TO DISPATCHES FROM CHICAGO TO THE BOSTON AMERICAN.

The woman with whom Jarnagin corresponded was Miss Mary Dunleavy, of No. 5336 Fifth avenue, Pittsburg. A package of letters, which had been returned by her, was found in one of three trunks in the flat. One of the letters written by Jarnagin, across the top of which was written the word "Shame" in another handwriting, follows:

The letter is as follows:

"Dear May: Don't you think we had better adopt the suggestion I made last summer to destroy the evidences of the past and begin anew? I can and will please you more as a devoted friend than to pursue the hopeless and foolish role of past years. I will demonstrate the fallacy of the proverbial lines, 'Sometimes friendship turns to love, but love to friendship never.' If you choose to cut me off altogether because I wish a return of my most ardent and pleading letters then there seems to be no alternative for me.

"I have conceded to your every whim and request with a grim will. I will accept the position you have held me in regard to yourself. As a friend you have regarded me pleasantly. As a sweetheart, lover and ardent swain, I have bored you. It is futile and useless for me to anticipate a mutual affection betweeen us commensurate with the sentiment with which I have idolized you."

ACT OF JEALOUS WIFE.

The band which had been wrapped around the package of letters, of which this is one, was broken and the trunk unlocked. As a result of this discovery the theory that Jarnagin was poisoned by his wife, who then committed suicide, in a fit of insane jealousy, has been accepted by some of the police who are working on the case.

Nothing but an autopsy can clear up the mystery. Even then, should it be established, as the police expect, that the couple died from poison, the question as to whether it was taken by accident or through the design of double suicide or murder of one and suicide of the other, still remains to be established.

From Boston, New York and Memphis relatives and friends of the dead man and

DEAR MAY:

DON'T you think we had better adopt the suggestion I made last Summer to destroy the evidences of the past and begin anew? I can and will please you more as a devoted friend than to pursue the hopeless and foolish role of past years. I will demonstrate the fallacy of the proverbal lines, 'Sometimes friendship turns to love, but love to friendship never.' If you choose to cut me off altogether beause I wish a return of my most ardent and pleading letters, then there seems to be no alternative for me.

"I will accept the position you have held me in regard to yourself. As a friend you have regarded me pleasantly. As a sweetheart, lover or ardent swain, I have bored you. It is futile and useless for me to anticipate a mutual affection between us commensurate with the sentiment with which I have idolized you."

MRS. UHRIG WIFE AGAIN, HER DIVORCE VACATED

Case Will be Heard by Court Later on Its Merits.

Husband Had Charged Her With Gross Habits of Intoxication.

Judge Fessenden, in the equity session of the Superior Court, this morning vacated a degree of divorce granted by him in the May term of last year's divorce court to Joseph Uhrig, Jr., against Margaret L. Uhrig. The divorce was granted on the grounds of gross and confirmed habits of intoxication.

Before the necessary six months to make the decree final had expired, Mrs. Uhrig filed a petition to have the decree vacated, and the case heard on its merits. She had consulted an attorney with the idea of contesting the case, but the attorney failed to make his appearance and the attorney for Uhrig at the time the case came up in the divorce court did not state to the Court that any opposition was contemplated by Mrs. Uhrig at all.

Said She Drank.

The case came up about two months ago on the petition. Edward F. McClennan appeared for Uhrig and Charles W. Bartlett for Mrs. Uhrig. In hearing this petition there was evidence given that Mrs. Uhrig was seen at various resorts about Boston drinking with a Dr. Draper, who is an oculist in the Paddock Building, and who was the co-respondent named in the suit.

Both Dr. Draper and his wife testified in Mrs. Uhrig's favor, and the Court did not go fully into the merits of the case, but simply passed on enough of the evidence to determine whether there should be another divorce trial.

Now the case will go on the list as if it never had been heard, but probably will not be reached before January.

Mrs. Uhrig, her face all smiles, hurriedly left the courthouse after a brief conference with Lawyer Bartlett.

Mrs. Uhrig Delighted.

To an AMERICAN reporter she said:

"I am very much delighted and very much surprised. I felt all through the trial that with the number of witnesses my husband produced and the horrible things they said of me, that the judge could not find in my favor.

"I will have a story of my own and plenty of witnesses to testify for me when the merits of the case are heard in the divorce court. That is all that I am going to say about the case at present."

MRS. MARGARET UHRIG A WIFE AGAIN

MISS WHALLEY GETS DIVORCE

NEW YORK, May 11.—A decree annulling her marriage to J. Sherrie Matthews has been granted to Norma Whalley by Supreme Court Justice Leventritt.

Miss Whalley, who is an Australian, is at present playing with the "Duchess of Danzig" company at the Gaiety Theatre in London. Her deposition set forth "misrepresentations," by which she was induced to become the comedian's wife on March 6, 1901.

The defendant has not appeared on the stage for two or three seasons, because of poor health, which was also one of his wife's reasons for seeking the annulment of the marriage.

SATOLLI TO MAKE A STUDY OF AMERICA

ROME, May 11.—At a meeting of the leading Cardinals at the Vatican to-day the conditions in America were discussed, and it was decided that Cardinal Satolli, in his approaching visit to America, should thoroughly inquire into the situation.

DEATH FOR WOMAN IN EXPLODING OIL STOVE

MRS. SARAH A. BUSH EXPIRES IN GREAT AGONY BEFORE AID COMES.

While preparing breakfast with an oil stove this morning Mrs. Sarah A. Bush, 40 years of age, of 43 Warwick street, accidentally overturned the stove, which exploded and set fire to her clothing. Before the eyes of a crowd of people, who were unable to assist her, she burned to death.

As her clothing became ignited she ran frantically about the house, then into the street. Her screams atracted the attention of many men. She ran into the street and threw herself to the ground and rolled in the mud in great agony.

Nothing could be found to wrap her in to smother the flames until all hope of saving her had fled. On the arrival of Chemical 12 the chemical was turned on her and the flames quenched.

Langerman, special envoy and commissioner general of Mulai Abdul Aziz, Sultan of Morocco, has left at the State Department large pictures of the two Arabian horses which the Sultan sent to President Roosevelt, but which are said to have died while crossing the Atlantic

NAT GOODWIN DUNNED FOR $18,000 FARO BILL?

"JUST A LITTLE MATTER," SAYS ACTOR, BUT GAMBLER'S VISIT DELAYS TRIP ABROAD.

By Boston American Leased Wire.

NEW YORK, May 11.—Comedian Nat Goodwin was to have sailed for Europe to-day, but Robert Gray, of Louisville, Ky., met him on Broadway after the theatre last night and—well, Mr. Goodwin decided to wait another day before sailing. After the meeting on Broadway Mr. Goodwin spent two long hours at the Metropole Hotel explaining to Mr. Gray why he had not paid certain markers aggregating $18,000, which he signed a few weeks ago, when playing in the Kentucky city. Mr. Gray came to New York to get the money from Goodwin or prevent him from sailing for Europe.

A Game of Faro Provided.

During his last trip into the West Mr. Goodwin, it is said, played cards in a Louisville resort controlled by Mr. Gray, whose index finger is of that nervous sort which under provocation itches for the trigger. A game of faro was provided for him. When the last turn of the cards was made Mr. Goodwin's credit had been exhausted, it is said, and he found himself owing $18,000, not counting the cash he had lost. There was a consultation between the proprietor of the place and the plunging comedian and Mr. Goodwin left Kentucky and proceeded on his way northward.

Mr. Gray recently read in a theatrical paper that Mr. Goodwin contemplated a trip to Europe, and he departed for New York. He has been here ten days, registered at the Hotel Metropole, where he has been waiting for a word in private with the man who had played against him.

"I'll Wait," Says Gambler.

Mr. Goodwin, with a party of friends, was at the Broadway Theatre last night. During the second act a card was handed to him by an usher. Mr. Goodwin read the name on the card, and sent back word: "I cannot see him until after the curtain drops."

"I'll wait," was the response. Not long afterward Mr. Goodwin left the theatre. He had gone a short distance up Broadway when he was overtaken by Mr. Gray, who accosted him and asked him for a conference. It was granted. He and Mr. Goodwin finally turned into the Metropole. It was noted by those who saw them that Mr. Goodwin was making an effort to explain something. He put his entire soul into the matter. Mr. Gray was apparently sceptical. They seemed to come to an understanding.

"A Mere Nothng"—Goodwin.

Seen by a reporter when the conference was over, Mr. Goodwin said: "I had intended sailing for Europe to-morrow, but urgent business reasons have intervened to delay my start one day. Mr. Gray and I are the best of friends. There was a trifle owed to him by me as the result of a game played in Louisville, but that is an old story and I am sure that Mr. Gray will tell you that it is a mere nothing."

"Mr. Goodwin and I have reached an understanding," said Mr. Gray a moment later. "He is a good fellow and so am I. I will not say a word to injure him. He overplayed himself a trifle, but it is all right. I regard Mr. Goodwin as one of the most amusing men I have ever known. I shall see him again to-morrow on a matter of business. I believe he sails for Europe under certain circumstances on Thursday.

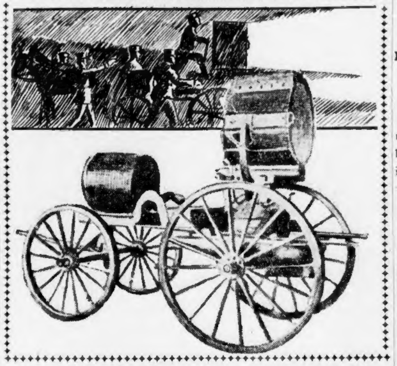
RUSSIANS IN DESPAIR, BLOW UP THEIR OWN SHIPS OF WAR



PORTABLE SEARCHLIGHT, USED BY JAPS.

The Japanese War Department has contracted for a number of new portable searchlights which can be used by the army in the field as readily as an ammunition wagon. The new arm to the service is a light wagon equipped with a light which is strong enough to be used over the rough roads in Corea and Manchuria, but which can be sent from point to point rapidly and easily.

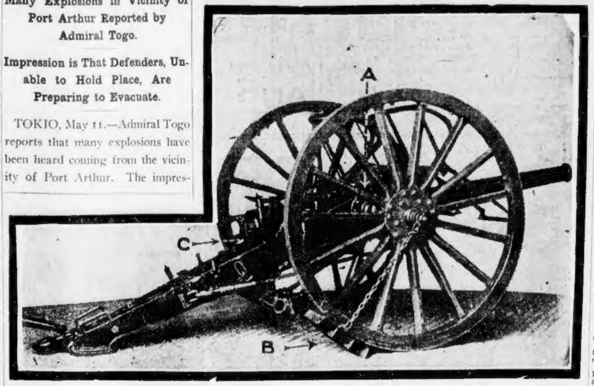
Experiments have been made in the field, and the aid that the searchlight has given the soldiers of the Mikado in night battles has been of the most important character. The light has a long range and can be turned on and off instantly, making the conditions such that their foes have a hard time in locating the wagon which contains the light after the current has been turned off.

The vast importance of stationary searchlights at forts and the equipment of warships with searchlights, have proved to the Japanese the value of having the army in the field provided with a similar means of defence.

Many Explosions in Vicinity of Port Arthur Reported by Admiral Togo.

Impression is That Defenders, Unable to Hold Place, Are Preparing to Evacuate.

TOKIO, May 11.—Admiral Togo reports that many explosions have been heard coming from the vicinity of Port Arthur. The impression is that the Russians, despairing of their ability to defend Port Arthur, are destroying their ships before evacuating the place.



THE DEADLY ARISAKA GUN, USED BY THE JAPS.

A shows the specially formed axle that forms an arch over the gun instead of under it, and thus prevents the lifting tendency, in a recoil. B the automatic sliding chocks, fastened with a chain to the hubs, that prevent recoil and allow quick change of position by simply pushing the wheels ahead. C the special screw breech lock that gives a quick vent to gases caused by smokeless powder and cools the gun quickly.

LONDON, May 11.—The Chee Foo correspondent of the Reuter Telegram Company sends an unofficial report that the Russians have destroyed their fleet at Port Arthur.

BIG FIGHT IN PASS?

PARIS, May 11.—The Matin's St. Petersburg correspondent says it is persistently rumored that there has been a big fight near Maotienling Pass between the Russians and General Kuroki's army. The Russians, he says, lost heavily, Lieutenant-General Zassalitch being among the killed.

ANOTHER JAP ARMY LANDED?

ST. PETERSBURG, May 11.—Railroad and telegraphic communication with Port Arthur has been restored.

The elation of the authorities at this news is sobered by official dispatches showing the activity of the Japanese in Eastern Manchuria. Kuanggension (Huangtiangsia?), fifty miles northeast of Fengwangcheng, was occupied by the Japanese April 5.

This permits an advance along the bad roads to the flank either at Liaoyang or Mukden.

The territory between the main road to Fengwangcheng and the river Tayang has been penetrated by such a strong force of Japanese as to lead to the suggestion that another army has landed at Takushan, of which the outside world has not before heard.

6,000 RUSSIANS REPULSE JAPS

LONDON, May 11.—The Central News has a dispatch from its Paris correspondent who quotes telegrams from St. Petersburg reporting a Japanese repulse about twenty miles east of Port Adams, Liao Tung peninsula. The Japanese were attempting to cut the railway when they were attacked by 6,000 Russians under General Zeykoff, who was assisted by troops under General Stoessel. A further attack, according to the telegrams, is expected as soon as the Japanese are reinforced.

CZAR REVIEWS 500,000 MEN

ST. PETERSBURG, May 11.—The Czar to-day reviewed 500,000 troops. The review, which was given in benefit of the Red Cross Society, and to which fifty roubles (about $25) admission was charged, was viewed by all the noble and fashionable element of the Russian capital. The review ended with a charge by the Cossacks.

RUSSIANS FALL BACK TO MUKDEN

LONDON, May 11.—The Rome correspondent of the Exchange Telegraph Company says an official dispatch has been received there from Chee Foo, saying that owing to the simultaneous advance of the Japanese from Feng Wang Cheng to New Chwang the Russians consider their position at Liao Yang untenable, and are already preparing to fall back on Mukden, where the first serious attempt to resist the Japanese advance will be made.

This is the first report received that the Japanese were at New Chwang.

JAPS CONCENTRATING.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 11.—It is believed here that the unopposed reopening of the Port Arthur railway is due to the fact that the Japanese are concentrating somewhere on the Liao Tung peninsula preparatory to a march in force either on Port Arthur or northward to support General Kuroki.

YANKEE MAJOR FOR WAR.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 11.—Captain T. Bentley Mott, military attache of the United States Embassy at Paris, and Major Macomb, U. S. A., have arrived here. Major Macomb will proceed to the front.

SHELLING PORT ARTHUR.

TOKIO, May 11.—Bombardment of Port Arthur has been renewed by Admiral Togo. The fleet is firing at a high angle from behind Laotishan promontory.

KOREAN CABINET OUT.

LONDON, May 11.—The Seoul correspondent of the Central News wires that the Corean cabinet has resigned in consequence of censure by the Emperor, who accused them of neglecting their duties.

RUSSIANS FALL, JAPS RISE.

LONDON, May 11.—Russian imperial fours to-day declined to 88¼ on the new land reverse sustained and the reported death of General Zassalitch. All Japanese issues are ½ higher.

TRAIN TO PORT ARTHUR.

LONDON, May 11.—The Central News has a dispatch from Liao Yang stating that the first train from Liao Yang reached Port Arthur yesterday.

NIECES GET COFFING ESTATE.

PITTSFIELD, May 11.—Chief Justice Knowlton, of the Supreme Court, has allowed the will of Rebecca C. Coffing, of Housatonic, who left $140,000, chiefly to two nieces, Louise and Fannie Coffing Bostwick. Twelve other heirs contested.

350 BAKERS ARE NOW OUT

MASTERS MAKE THREATS

"Everything is stagnant in the bakers' strike, and will remain so until the end of the week. The master bakers have circulated stories that there will be internal dissensions in the union on Saturday night—that the 350 men will not get their strike pay then, and will go back to work. I wish to nail that lie. The men will get their strike pay, I can assure you. The men who have gone to work are fully alive to the duty they owe to their fellow-workmen on strike. There is no break in the ranks."

This statement was made to a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter to-day by Matthew Steele, district organizer of the Bakers' International Union.

All the men reported at roll call at No. 45 Eliot street this morning. M. J. Slattery, of Framingham, was among the speakers.

The fight of the striking bakers has been taken up by other Boston unions, and some of them have voted to fine members who are found to be using non-union bread. One union is said to have made the fine $15.

It was reported at headquarters to-day that out of the 1,400 men who went on strike but 250 are now out of employment.

Master bakers continue to reiterate that the bakers will never get even the old scale of wages, much less an increase.

Much talk about the introduction of labor saving baking machinery is heard among the master bakers. They include bread mixers, dough dividers, weighing machines, cake mixers, cream beaters and even an automatic pie maker, all of which would throw many men out of employment.

IN JAIL, DEFIED COURT 2 YEARS

After sacrificing $1,400 in wages and spending nearly two years in East Cambridge jail, because he refused to obey what he believes is an unjust court mandate, Jeremiah Casey may be set free to-day. He says he would rather spend a life time in durance than be the victim of judicial injustice, but his friends are endeavoring to effect a settlement with Miss Anne Trainor, to whom he was ordered to pay $150 and also to provide a bond of $1,000 that he would pay her $6 a month for the support of her child.

She had caused his arrest on February 14, 1902, while he was a blacksmith in the Newton street department.

Refusing to pay, he was sent to jail, and after four months tried to take the poor debtor's oath. Failing to obtain freedom, he again appealed to Judge Almy in vain.

Finding that he would make no further effort in his own behalf, his friends opened negotiations with the young woman.

Casey has not lacked for money to obey the court order. Just before his arrest he inherited $1,000 from his mother. Since he was locked up in the jail he has only left it once, when he was taken out under a habeas corpus writ.

JEALOUSY MOTIVE FOR JARNAGIN POISONING

women are hurrying to Chicago, and are expected to arrive in time to be present at the inquest. Jarnagin's parents and a brother, who lived in Memphis, started North as soon as they received word of the tragedy. Miss Woodbury, of Boston, sister of Mrs. Jarnagin, is also on her way.

POTTER OFF FOR CHICAGO.

At the office of the Potter Wall Paper Company, 24 Lake street, Chicago, a dispatch from Millionaire Potter stated that he would be there to-day. Mr. Potter has a stock farm in New Jersey, a few miles from Trenton. He was greatly shocked at the news of Jarnagin's death.

The farther the police probe into the matter the more mysterious the tragedy becomes. Jarnagin was thirty-seven years old, well educated and of polished manners. From the letters taken from the dead man's trunk the police have learned that he has had at least two romances before he was married to Miss Woodbury, of No. 80 Huntington avenue, Boston.

Mrs. Jarnagin's brother, Charles H. Woodbury, a wealthy mill owner, of Wyoming, R. I., declared to-day to an AMERICAN reporter his belief that his sister and brother-in-law were murdered.

PRESSED BY CREDITORS.

The bodies of the couple were found in their apartment at No. 1332 Dakin street, Chicago. Both were fully dressed. There were a number of letters in the house, the Chicago police say, indicating that the Jarnagins were being pressed for money by Boston creditors.

The theory of a suicide pact is scouted by friends as well as by relatives of the couple in this section, however, who insist that the tragedy must have been the result of accident or double murder.

Mrs. Jarnagin was a frequent letter writer and in her correspondence had always reflected contentment and a happy disposition.

Jarnagin, who was a native of Memphis, Tenn., and was formerly Boston manager for the Peats Wall Paper Company, leaves a brother in New York, where he holds a responsible position in a bank. The couple were married here in January, in Trinity Church, by the Rev. Dr. Blanchard, a wedding breakfast following at the Lenox.

"IT CAN'T BE TRUE."

News of the double tragedy was conveyed to Mr. Woodbury and to friends of the young couple by the BOSTON AMERICAN. Mr. Woodbury was greatly shocked. He exclaimed:

"My sister and her husband dead? It can't be true. Why, it was only three or four days ago that we had a beautiful letter from her at her new home in Chicago. She was then looking forward to setting up housekeeping. A flat had been procured in a desirable neighborhood, and furniture had been ordered forwarded from Boston.

"She could not have been despondent. Her letter was couched in the brightest terms and she was perfectly happy.

"I cannot understand it. She had been married to Mr. Jarnagin only since January 1. The wedding took place in Boston and was a love match. I am her only brother, and aside from her sister Mary L. R., who lives here, I am her only living relative.

"I don't know what to do out here, cut off from telegraphic communication. Has any one notified Mr. William Jarnagin? He is the brother of my poor brother-in-law and holds a position in some New York bank. I want all the facts, and then I'll know just how to proceed.

"MY SISTER MURDERED."

"My sister must have been murdered, but I can't understand who could have done it and why.

"So far as I know she had not an enemy in the world. Who found the bodies? I would like to know that, and what were they doing on the bed fully dressed? Was any person found? Where are the bodies now? I want all the information possible.

"My sister Mary will go to Chicago and make all arrangements for bringing the bodies East unless Mr. Jarnagin's relatives have other plans. My sister's remains will be buried in the family lot with those of father and mother at Amesbury, where we were born. Mr. P. E. Hawkins of Boston, a friend, will accompany my sister, as it is impossible for me to go."

LIFE A BLANK FOR ONE ALONE.

"It's a good thing both are dead, for life would be a blank to one without the other," said Percy E. Hawkins, of No. 68 Westland avenue, the most intimate friend in Boston of Mr. Jarnagin, to an AMERICAN reporter.

"I have known Mr. Jarnagin," he continued, "for three years. I first met him when attending Harvard University. He was then manager of Peat's Boston branch. He was a first-class fellow and an excellent business man. Although not a college graduate he was well educated. I can't imagine a reason for suicide and believe that there must be some mistake. In fact there was no reason why either should commit suicide. They were happily married and had everything to live for.

NOT ORDINARY LOVE MATCH.

"Jarnagin and Miss Woodbury were married the first week in January last. They were very much wrapped up in each other. It was more than an ordinary love match.

"Jarnagin had an excellent position with the Chicago wall paper house, and they seemed to be on the top wave of success. He was expecting great things from his new business connections. Jarnagin left New York last July to take his new position with the Potter Milles Wall Paper Company in Chicago. I was the only outside guest at the wedding last January, and have met Mr. Jarnagin and wife since then.

POSITIVE IT IS NOT SUICIDE.

I am positive there was no motive for suicide as it was but a few days ago that I received a letter from Mr. Jarnagin asking me to send on a carload of furniture which was stored in a Boston storehouse and which he owned. He said that he had decided to quit the hotel in which he was living and go to housekeeping. It was only this morning that I shipped the goods. The bill of lading is now on the way to Chicago. Had they contemplated suicide they would not have gone to the bother of having the furniture sent on.

BOTH WELL CONNECTED.

"Both parties were well connected. The wife belonged to an old family, the Woodburys of Salem. Both her parents are dead. Mrs. Jarnagin was known to me long before her marriage. She was about thirty-eight years old, medium complexion, slight build, light blue eyes and was considered an atractive woman.

"She had taught school for several years off and on. Last fall she taught in the primary grades at Cochituate. At other times she taught at Boston and Malden. I often heard her speak of her school work, to which she was much devoted. She was one of the finest young women I ever met. Her husband was also of sterling character. His parents are prominent residents of Memphis, Tenn. He has a brother in a New York bank."

WELL KNOWN IN COCHITUATE.

Mrs. Edward Jarnagin was well known in Cochituate, where she taught school in the kindergarten grade two years. She boarded with Senator Chester Williams's family on Pond street and later with Mrs. Carrie Thayer on Main street. These two families were greatly shocked to learn of the tragic deaths.

"Mrs. Jarnagin was a charming woman," said Mrs. Carrie Thayer. "She boarded with me from Sept. 1, 1903, until she got married, Jan. 1.

"She was very much in love with the man she married. I believe he was the first lover she had ever had. She was a petite little person, very stylish, although rather plain in features.

"She was what you call snappy. She had something of a temper, but kept it under good control for the most part. She was universally liked and had great success as a teacher of children.

"It was only the other day that I had a letter from her. I had written her to send me a photograph of herself. In her letter she said: 'I would gladly send you a picture if I had one. But I have not had any taken since I was fourteen years old. Just as soon as I get fat I am going to sit for some, and then you shall have one.'

WANTED HOME OF HER OWN.

"They had only recently moved into their new home in Chicago. They had been there since the first of the year. She had written me often about the anticipated joys of having a home of her own. The last letter I had was addressed from 1324 Dakin street, Chicago.

"I feel confident that the death of Mr. and Mrs. Jarnagin was due to accident. She was in the habit of taking medicines and may have got something poisonous mixed with the food.

"I am positive that during their brief married life there was never a jar between them. I never saw a couple more in love than they. He was thirty-six and she was thirty-eight.

"Mr. Jarnagin had been in Boston about two and a half years, and during the most of that time had lived at the Hotel Nottingham. He grew tired of hotel life and took a room in the flat that Miss Woodbury was then running at 80 Huntington avenue. That's how he got acquainted with her.

DEVOTED TO HER SISTER.

"She was very devoted to her sister Mary, and did much toward that young woman's support. Mary has been a semi-invalid for years. The father of the two girls was John R. Woodbury, of Salem, and was at one time well to do. When he died he left the younger daughter, Mary, some little money, and this, together with what help Elizabeth gave her, supported her. I never heard of Mary doing any work.

"Previous to coming to Cochituate, Elizabeth Woodbury was a teacher in Malden. While teaching there she lived in Boston in the Huntington avenue flat.

"Mr. Jarnagin was very smart. He was a native of Tennessee. She was a very bright, self-reliant little woman. She graduated from the Salem High School eighteen or twenty years ago and then fitted herself for kindergarten work.

KEPT COMPANY TWO YEARS

"The Jarnagins kept company about two years before they were married. He went away last June to take his new position in Chicago, and Miss Woodbury never saw him again until he came on to marry her the first of last January.

"I can offer no explanation for the strange tragedy, other than it was due to accident. So far as I know neither of them had an enemy in the world. He has a brother William, employed in a bank in New York.

"Elizabeth was a perfect slave to her sister Mary, who is now visiting her brother, Charles H. Woodbury, of Wyoming, R. I. Mary was intending to move to Chicago and make her home with Mr. and Mrs. Jarnagin."

Amesbury is the native place of the Woodburys. It is there that the father of John R. and the mother, Annie F., are buried. Mrs. Jarnagin's body will be interred beside those of her parents.

QUIET, MODEST WOMAN.

Mrs. Chester William echoed the many good things said of Mrs. Jarnagin by Mrs. Thayer.

"Before her marriage Mrs. Jarnagin boarded with us about a year," she said. "She was a very quiet, modest little woman and had great success in her school work. I don't think I ever saw a happier couple than she and her husband."

Edward Jarnagin was born in Memphis, Tenn., thirty-eight years ago, and first came to Boston four years ago to open the branch store of Alfred Peats Company, at 27 Franklin street. He was manager of the store and drew a large salary, which made it possible for him to entertain and make many friends among the higher class in Boston. He joined one of the clubs and was a member of the First Corps of Cadets for a year.

RECALLED TO NEW YORK.

A year ago the first of May he was recalled to New York to become secretary of the corporation, but only held the office until the following July, when he entered the employ of the Potter Wall Paper Mills Company in Chicago.

The bodies of Mr. and Mrs. Jarnagin are lying in the undertaking establishment of John A. Linn, in Chicago, where they were taken shortly after their discovery by C. W. Hoyer, the real estate agent in charge of the Dakin street house.

FIRE PANIC IN ST. LOUIS INN

By Boston American Leased Wire.

ST. LOUIS, May 11.—A midnight fire in the Planters Hotel caused a panic among the guests, and for a while it was thought that several lives would be sacrificed in the excitement.

The Planters Hotel is one of the city's largest and most fashionable hostelries. It was crowded with World's Fair visitors, and when the alarm of fire was sounded pandemonium broke loose. The fire department was on the scene in a few minutes, and aided in restoring calm. A defective flue is believed to have been responsible for the fire. It was discovered on the ninth floor of the hotel, in the room occupied by Weichert & Gardiner, Broklyn, N. Y., shoe manufacturers, and used as a sample room. The entire contents of the room were destroyed.

A great deal of the excitement attending the blaze was due in a measure to the failure of the freight elevators to work properly and the firemen had to go through the main lobby in reaching the fire.

HAM'S WIFE, MATRON OF HONOR, ABLAZE WITH GEMS

Blazing with diamonds and costly gems, Mrs. Wallace H. Ham, wife of the convicted embezzler, acted as matron of honor at the wedding of her sister, the beautiful Miss Evangeline Coulton, to Robert D. McElroy, a well known Brookline man.

Miss Coulton, the sister-in-law, was the one person in the world, next to his wife, that was closest to Ham's heart. She was brought up in his home and it was there she became the beautiful and accomplished woman that she is.

WOE AHEAD FOR BACKYARD CAT

WASHINGTON, May 11.—A Washington medical society has begun a crusade against the backyard cat, as evidenced in the following resolution:

> Resolved, That the large number of homeless or backyard cats in the city of Washington are a menace to the public health, as they spread disease, particularly among children with whom they come in contact, and we are of the opinion that the commissioners of the District of Columbia should provide for their extermination, as is the case with dogs during the warm Summer months, except as may be provided for by a license.

Of this resolution President Macfarland of the Governing Board of District Commissioners said to-day: "I shall recommend legislation by Congress directing the impounding of loose cats. The Commissioners can do nothing at present, as legislation is required by Congress, but I should like to see such legislation passed."

PRAY POPE TO EXEMPT U. S.

WASHINGTON, May 11.—A petition has been sent to Rome from the Archbishops of the United States praying that the Pope exempt this country from the operation of the mandate respecting church music.

It is the belief of Cardinal Gibbons that the Catholic Church will lose tremendously if this rule is made mandatory. It is understood that Archbishop Quigley of Chicago is opposed to the Gregorian chant, and that these sentiments are shared by Archbishops Ireland, Chapelle, Williams and Elder. Nearly all the archbishops and bishops of this country have canvassed the question among their parish priests, and the decision is that such a move as contemplated would work havoc in the Catholic Church. The elimination of female voices from church choirs and the subsequent loss of interest in church affairs is held to be a serious matter.

Teeth Extracted
NO PAIN
Dr. Bryson, the famous expert in the art of painless extracting, is now in Boston, to remain until June 1st, and will extract teeth exclusively in this office. Dr. Bryson has a national reputation for removing all teeth painlessly, ESPECIALLY ROOTS AND TEETH THAT ARE BROKEN DOWN AND DECAYED IN THE GUMS. He uses his own discovered method, which, beside making all extractions painless, instantly relieves neuralgia and any pain in or about the teeth. Many people believe Dr. Bryson's marvelous success in removing teeth is due to some hypnotic influence. This is a mistake. NOR HAS HE EVER CLAIMED THIS TO BE TRUE. That he is without an equal anywhere is acknowledged by all who have teeth extracted by him, also by those who witness the operations.

'BOSTON MADE THE LAUGHING STOCK OF ALL'

So Declares Hickey, Who Says City Is Tired of Judge Emmons's "Capers."

BITTER ATTACK IN HOUSE

The question of increasing the salary of Chairman W. H. H. Emmons, of the Police Board, from $4,500 to $5,000, which will come up before the House of Representatives to-day for final action, was the occasion of one of the bitterest attacks upon the floor of the House ever made upon the Boston reformer.

Judge Emmons refused to discuss the matter this morning, but intimated that he would have something to say later.

The oral assault on the Chairman of the Police Board was made by Representative William E. Hickey, who is violently opposed to raising the Judge's salary.

He declared that the Judge was demoralizing the police force and making Boston the laughing stock of the whole country by poking his nose into everybody's business and not attending to his own.

The bill under discussion provides for the increase of the Judge's salary $500 a year, at the same time taking away from him about $700 in dog license fees. It was pointed out by some of the speakers that this would in reality be a reduction of the Judge's salary and a saving to the city, but Mr. Hickey declared that he not only would not consent to the proposed increase, but he favored taking away the dog tax anyhow.

Under the bill the Judge's two assistants are to have their salaries increased from $4,000 to $4,500, and the dog tax taken away from them also.

Patroling Streets at Night.

"They are pretty well paid already for their services," said Mr. Hickey, "and certainly won no Carnegie medals or a place in the hall of fame for either common sense or bravery.

"The board has for a chairman a man who, I think, is not fit for the place; for certainly he is demoralizing the police force as well as making Boston the laughing stock of the country.

"They are now receiving fairly good salaries, and if they were not getting better pay than they were getting before they would not hold on to the job so long.

"Why, there are many men in this House who are better able to fill the position who would be willing to accept the place at the present salary.

"No Parkhurst Needed."

"It is not dignified for the chairman of the Police Board to be parading the streets at night looking in doorways and alleys and frightening inoffensive women out of their wits.

"Boston is not a village and we do not need a Parkhurst to tell us what is right or wrong.

"It is not keeping up the high reputation of our city to have a man like Judge Emmons poking his nose in everybody's business and not attending to his own.

"Why, he is the talk of the whole country and has done more to injure the good name of our great city than any other agency, and I am surprised he does not take a look at himself in the mirror and see how ridiculous he can be when nobody is around."

Representative Grady: "Doesn't the chairman of the board do more work than the other two members combined?"

Representative Hickey: "I admit he does; but if the chairman sees fit to go about the State giving lectures the city shouldn't pay for it.

"His lecturing has a tendency to scare and send little children astray with his dark lantern, blackjacks, jimmies and picture of Pomeroy.

"Tired of His Funny Capers."

"A whole lot of people feel that way, but they haven't the courage of their convictions to say so. I hope this body, this noble Legislature, will not put a premium on erratic public servants.

"The people of Boston are obliged to pay this salary and they should be consulted as to whether the man was competent or worthy of his hire.

"I tell you, gentlemen, we Bostonians are getting sick and tired of Judge Emmons and his funny capers."

Representative Frank Seiberlich, of Boston: "The city of Boston will save money by granting this increase and taking away the dog license money. It is no waste of money."

Representative Hickey: "The member from Jamaica Plain should understand I am opposed to paying him any increase and favor taking the dog tax money away from him. Think it over. If Judge Emmons and his associates could earn any more money at any other business, do you think they would hold on?"

Representative Battis, of Boston: "I am in favor of increasing Judge Emmons' salary, and, while I do not approve of his methods, he is sincere and honest."

"It is a personal matter with the gentleman who has just spoken," said Representative Hickey. "He comes from Chairman Emmons's ward, and I don't think the member from East Boston would object to serve at the same salary the Judge is now receiving and leaving out the dog license graft."

MRS. OELRICHS GETS $2,600,000 FOR REALTY

SELLS SAN FRANCISCO PROPERTY TO SPRECKELS SYNDICATE.

MRS. HERMANN OELRICHS.

By Boston American Leased Wire.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 11.—Mrs. Herman Oelrichs has sold her estate in this city, with the exception of her Fairmount home property, the water front lots on North Beach and land at Holly Park, to a syndicate composed of Robert Spreckels, James D. Phelan, Will A. Magee, Thomas Magee, Jr., Frederick Magee and Gustave Sutro for $2,600,000. This is the largest single cash transaction in real estate that has taken place in San Francisco.

SAN RAFAEL, Cal., May 11.—Herman Oelrichs was thrown from a bicycle and severely injured about the head while riding near his country home in Ross valley, Marin county. A large dog ran out and attacked him. He was riding quite rapidly, and his wheel struck the dog, throwing Mr. Oelrichs violently to the ground.

$500 DOG SHOT, WOMAN TO SUE

OUTRAGE, OWNER SAYS

"I will consult my attorney to-day with a view to bringing immediate suit against the Animal Rescue League, if such an action can be brought. Why such treatment of dumb pets by them is outrageous," exclaimed Dr. Laura A. C. Hughes, to a reporter for the AMERCAN to-day, when asked if she would seek to recover damages for the killing of her pet thoroughbred fox terrier "Toby."

"There was absolutely no grounds for such haste. The dog was only at the headquarters of the league an hour before it was killed by orders of Mrs. Huntington Smith, the president. There was no veterinary present to examine the dog to determine if it was suffering from some disease necessitating immediate death, or was the poor little thing dirty or starved looking.

Dr. Sullivan, the veterinary of the society, called at the rooms of the league at 3:30, but Toby had already been killed. That was just an hour after it was placed on our door step by my sister.

"Toby was the pet of the house," added Dr. Hughes, "and the constant companion of my aunt, who is now seventy-six years of age and very feeble. The old lady was greatly affected by the loss of her pet. In fact we all are. We have its remains here and will give them a burial.

"What possessed that woman, Mrs. Hadley of Hemenway street, to be so officious is beyond me. My sister had been to Brookline and had taken the dog with her. On her return she was in a hurry to get down town and on passing our house, at No. 98 Huntington avenue, got off and placed the dog on the step and got on the same car again. Mrs. Hadley was on the same car. After seeing the dog deposited on the step she got off the car, rushed back, picked up poor Toby and took another car for the headquarters of the league.

PROVIDENCE ESTATE BOUGHT BY CANFIELD

NEW YORK, May 11.—Richard A. Canfield has sold two dwellings, Nos. 6 and 8 West Forty-seventh street, for $125,000. He had held the houses for investment, with a possible view of rebuilding them into a gaming house. He is believed to be worth nearly $5,000,000.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., May 11.—Richard A. Canfield has just purchased for his wife the residence of the late Police Commissioner Richard H. Deming, at No. 68 Burnett street. The transaction throughout has been in the name of Mrs. Canfield.

It is one of the most commodious and finely finished houses in that part of the city, comprising about 27,000 square feet of land and fronting 200 feet on Burnett street.

SCHOOL BOARD FIGHT DIVIDES HUB SMART SET

Claims of Mrs. Wells and Mrs. Cabot Discussed in Drawing Rooms.

GOV. BATES IN QUANDARY

A battle is raging at the State House over the possible appointment of a member of the Massachusetts Board of Education to succeed Mrs. Gannett Wells, whose husband was the highest Freemason in the State while he lived, and a classmate of former Governor John D. Long. Mrs. Wells has served on the board for sixteen years, and is Chairman of the Board of Visitors of the Normal Art School and the Framingham State School.

Her opponent is the wife of Dr. Richard Cabot, of the Massachusetts General Hospital. The families of both candidates are prominent socially.

Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, her relative by marriage, is for Mrs. Cabot; Hon. John D. Long is for Mrs. Wells. The battle has been carried into the drawing rooms.

Governor Bates is in a quandary. He understands adjudicating between men, but is unused to dilemmas like the present.

Mrs. Wells is widely known for her public service and philanthropic work. She aided in the militia Red Cross organization; she introduced sand gardens in Boston; she aided materially in establishing the Charlesbank gymnasium, and has been active in behalf of the deaf and the feeble minded.

Her opponents urge that her duties will be too arduous if she gets a new eight years term.

WHEEL WHIRLS MAN TO DEATH

PROVIDENCE, R. I., May 11.—Joseph Smith, aged thirty years, North Providence, is dying at the Rhode Island Hospital as the result of being whirled around a shafting in the calender room of the Silver Spring Bleachery & Dyeing Company's plant on Charles street.

Smith was caught by his clothing and hurled around. Frantic cries for help summoned a dozen employes to the scene, but they were unable to do anything for him until the power was shut down. Meanwhile Smith was carried around the wheel, each revolution crushing and knocking his body against the floor and ceiling.

PET DOG GUARDS OVER LOST BOYS

Standing guard at their side while the two little lost boys held their arms around each other to keep warm, a little fox terrier was found with Cornelius and Patrick Donga on the West Boston bridge by a Cambridge policeman. The boys who are nine and five years old respectively, had wandered away from their home at No. 68 Brimmer street. Fanny, the fox terrier, trotted with them. A policeman was attracted to them on the bridge by the barks of the faithful animal. The dog refused to close her eyes until the mother of the boys appeared at the station house.

FIRE AND PANIC

RESULT OF EXPLOSION

MAN MAY DIE

Special to Boston American.

WEYMOUTH, May 11.—An explosion and fire in the fireworks laboratory of Edmund S. Hunt & Sons, Broad street, placed lives of hundreds of citizens in the town in danger and resulted in the serious injury of Joseph Quinn and Stefano Galebo. Galebo is not expected to live.

The two men were at work alone on the laboratory. Suddenly the air was rent with a terrific explosion. Fire started, and then a panic when it was learned that thousands of giant firecrackers were stored in the next shed. The fire was quickly extinguished.

The laboratory was completely wrecked. Windows and doors in adjacent buildings were blown off.

HIT PRINCIPAL, BOY EXPELLED

Because he struck Principal Loker for saying he lied, the Needham School Board has expelled from the High School Dana Southworth, son of Editor George W. Southworth, of the Needham Chronicle. Leading citizens are signing a petition, asking that Principal Loker be dismissed.

Southworth was expelled at a secret session. The session was a stormy one. The father refused to allow Southworth to publicly apologize to Principal Loker.

Southworth says the principal told him his excuses were lies, and he (Southworth) then struck him.

CLERGY ATTACK ON BOSTON SCORES DIXON'S MORALS

"There is a better enforcement of the law here than anywhere else in the country," declared Rev. Dr. Crane, of People's Temple, in refutation of the statement credited to Rev. Dr. Dixon, of the Ruggles Street Church, during a sermon delivered before a Brooklyn congregation, that the moral tone of the rural districts of Boston is lower than that of the mining camp of the West.

The remarks of the Boston clergyman are being discussed by the clergy of the city, and the opinion is general that he is greatly mistaken.

"If the police enforced the law in the West," said Dr. Crane, "the church members would think the millennium had dawned. I credit the enforcement of the law in Boston to the public conscience and to the absolute honesty, the undoubted ability, of Judge William Henry Harrison Emmons."

Rev. Allen F. Stockdale, of the Berkeley Temple, said: "I have lived in the West and in the East, and I do not find such a very great difference between the two in real moral tone."

Rev. Dr. Hanson, of Tremont Temple, said: "I cannot agree with Dr. Dixon at all. I think if he had travelled in the West he would not make that statement, but one the very reverse of it."

LAWSON BLUFF SAYS SUED FIRM

Members of the house of Kidder, Peabody & Co. say that Thomas W. Lawson is at fault in his calculations as to the amount of his profits from the gas reorganization.

Lawson claims 10 per cent. of $10,000,000, or $1,000,000. Kidder, Peabody & Co. say that his share was 10 per cent. of $1,000,000, or $100,000, and that of that latter amount Mr. Lawson has already drawn down nearly $80,000, leaving almost $20,000 in the vaults of Kidder, Peabody & Co. that has not yet been called for by Mr. Lawson.

F. H. Peabody, senior member, says:

"Kidder, Peabody & Co. admit that an agreement was made with H. H. Rogers which named Mr. Lawson's share of the profits as ten per cent. But under this arrangement he was entitled to about $100,000.

"His statements are all bosh, his actions are those of a bluff, and when the matter has been thoroughly aired in court Mr. Lawson will find that justice demands facts and nothing else."

PRIMITIVE METHODISTS IN SESSION AT LOWELL

LOWELL, May 11.—The Eastern Conference of the Primitive Methodist Church has opened its thirteenth annual session in the Gorham Street Church. About twenty-five churches are represented. A meeting of the examining committee was presided over by Rev. Elijah Humphries, of New Bedford, with Rev. W. R. Taylor, of Methuen, secretary.

The general committee of the conference, Rev. William H. Shaw president, took care of all of the preparatory business of the conference. The conference formally organized this morning.

NO DRINKS FOR PATROLMEN.

Two patrolmen have been summarily dismissed from the force by Judge Emmons for drinking in saloons while on duty. The two are Charles H. Bertsch and Laughlin I. McGillivray, of Division 2. Like offences previously have been punished by short suspensions or a fine.

DEATH SKIPS HIM 11 TIMES IN 11 YEARS WITH 11 ARRESTS AS DRUNK

Special to Boston American.

WESTFIELD, May 11.—Michael Aylward has been sentenced to the House of Correction for thirty days on a charge of drunkenness. This is his eleventh arrest in eleven years. During that period he has had as many hair breadth escapes from death, and several times a medical examiner has been called in to view his remains.

Michael was found, cold and stiff, lying beside the N. Y., N. H. & H. tracks and picked up for dead. The warmth of the station revived him and when the medical examiner reached the station Michael was chatting amiably with his captors.

Several years ago Michael decided to leave a train running forty miles an hour at the Thomas street grade crossing and did so, after executing about eight somersaults. The horrified crew went back to pick up the fragments, but Michael was calmly brushing the dust from his clothing and whistling merrily.

Later, at Congamond, Michael and two friends went out in a boat. The boat sank. Michael's two friends were drowned, but he was fished out and revived.

More recently Aylward, after a debauch, was found frozen by the roadside. His hair and clothing had to be loosened with an ax. He survived the experience without a cough.

PILLSBURY CASE MAY GO TO SUPREME COURT

ANDOVER, May 11.—Ex-Congressman William S. Knox, counsel for George P. Pillsbury of Ballardvale, against whom Miss Anna Gertrude Newcomb secured a verdict of $2,250 for alleged breach of promise, is endeavoring to have the case sent to the Supreme Court.

MAINE FISHING SEASON OPENS.

LEWISTON, Me., May 11.—Crowds of fishermen have been arriving here during the past twenty-four hours. The ice is out of Mooselookmeguntic, and will be out of Rangeley Lake probably to-day. Fishing began bright and early on Mooselookmeguntic.

CAREFUL PLANS FOR G. A. R. MEN

Mechanics' Building will be Camp Jack Adams, and Colonel Charles K. Darling, of the Sixth Regiment, will be in command during Grand Army week in August. Colonel Darling, in accepting the appointment, has planned carefully the details of arrangements for the comfort of ten thousand veterans, who will be quartered there.

It will be the second time in four years that the G. A. R. veterans have been camped under the roof of Mechanics' Building. The various city departments of Boston will be requested to cooperate for the safety and comfort of the camp's population, especially as regards fire protection and sanitary arrangements. A telephone system will be installed and a hospital established.

The services of the Sixth Regiment will be enlisted as far as possible to assist in the policing of the metropolis. Credentials will be given by the committee to those making application. Upon presentation of these to Colonel Darling, quarters will be assigned.

DAMAGES FOR TWO CLAIMANTS.

A verdict has been found for the defendant in the case of Owen Winn vs. Massachusetts Brewing Company. He sued for $1,000 personal injuries. A $500 verdict has been given Cora L. Saunders against the Boston Elevated Railway Company.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., May 11.—Since her arrival in St. Louis Miss Helen Gould has been constantly attended by the strong hired body guard, whose duty is to protect her from annoyance, principally photographic snapshots and promoters propositions. Among the devices which Miss Gould uses to escape the curious populace are very plain travelling clothes and a closed automobile.

SUFFRAGE FOR WOMEN COMING

So said Mrs. Mary A. Livermore to 350 people at the annual banquet and festival of the New England and Massachusetts Woman Suffrage Association.

The banquet was held in Faneuil Hall. Judge E. H. Reynolds, of Maine, was also a prominent speaker. Mrs. Julia Ward Howe presided. Mrs. Livermore said:

Fifty Years in Movement.

"I joined this association when it was first started in 1850, and at that time there were just seventeen professions open to women. They were not even the legal possessors of their own children. They could not prevent the father giving the child away even before it was born. Since then they have become the equal of the men in everything."

Judge Reynolds declared that he had been a woman suffragist before he was married, and had been one ever since. "Who are those who are opposed to woman's suffrage?" he asked. "They are the men and women who see nothing of progress for the future, and who note none in the past. They belong to the labor unions. They think the union is for the working man and not for the working woman."

Unions Not Against Women.

Frank K. Foster challenged the statement that labor organizations were the enemies of woman's suffrage, holding that the contrary was the real truth. He urged that the co-operation of the wage earner be secured. The assistance of the women was desired in the fight for better conditions for the worker. The union label should be on everything they purchased, he said.

MOTHER SURE TUCKER'S SAFE

Mrs. A. F. Tucker, the mother of the young man accused of the murder of Mabel Page, said to-day that she was confident that the Grand Jury would free her son.

"I have just visited Charlie in the prison," said she, "and I found him cheerful. I go to see him three times a week. He assures me that he had not the slightest connection with the tragedy. The story Charlie tells of his movements on the day of the murder is perfectly straight and it can be corroborated.

"His health is good and he eats regularly. Most of his food is sent in from the outside."

TOWED SAFE ASHORE BY PAIR OF HORSES

PROVINCETOWN, May 11.—Upset in their dory with a cargo of 3,000 pounds of pollock, brought in by a Gloucester seiner, Charles Foster and a Portuguese boy clung to the bottom of the upturned craft. Nearing the shore Foster struck out, landed and drove two horses that were waiting into the water. He harnessed them to the little boat, and after swimming for a while the animals touched firm ground and pulled everything high and dry.

WHO KILLED GERALD BROWN

BY CAPTAIN RICHARD RUDD.

WHAT BOSTON AMERICAN READER CAN SOLVE THE PROBLEM IN THIS STORY?

Limp in the arm-chair by the fireplace stretched the form of Gerald Brown, with wide-open eyes, gaping out into the darkness, and a look of fright and stupefaction frozen on the white dead face.

GERALD BROWN was dead. Who killed him?

To John Dexter, the only relative of the sour and morose old millionaire, this seemed a problem that presented but little difficulty. But after an attempt at its solution had entangled him in a web of mystery that became more involved at every effort to find the master knot, after it had given him an intimate personal acquaintance with more evil men than he had supposed the world could hold in the same century, after it had broken his health and almost shattered his mind, he came to be of the opinion that perhaps the reader will share, when he has followed through this strange story of the Murder Trust, and the ill-favored company that made up its directorate.

The Murder in the Brownstone House.

JOHN DEXTER, attorney-at-law, of No. — Nassau street, was walking briskly one Sunday night in early Autumn up Fifth avenue in the direction of the house of old Gerald Brown, his uncle, whistling softly to himself and dwelling with pleasure on the very near prospect of a meeting with Miss Prudence Grimes, a young woman so utterly unlike all the other young women in the world that Dexter was amazed that he had ever been able to see anything in any of the latter in the least worthy of a young man's admiration.

It may be that young Dexter was impressionable, for he had first met the lady only that same afternoon. But when one is a young and a not very busy lawyer the affairs of life do not crowd the sentiment out of the thoughts, and Cupid can accomplish in a single hour of uninterrupted endeavor more than he can do in months in an older and busier nature, where he can only come in to work at odd times, when the more important machinery is shut down for necessary repairs.

Old Grimes, of Broad street, the man who organized the Transcontinental Holdings Company, was the angel who had fluttered out of Paradise bringing this surpassing glory into Dexter's life. Grimes was old and fat, and angel was not the exact term applied to him by his business associates, but when he had pulled up his carrriage on the avenue that afternoon, and bade Dexter enter and make the acquaintance of his daughter, his halo was plainly visible to the eyes of the young man.

Grimes had always taken a fatherly interest in Dexter. He had even gone so far as to give him cases—particularly such cases as he expected to lose, and in which only some trifling difference in the amount of the damages was involved.

"I have always wanted you to meet Prue, Dexter," he said, when the lawyer was seated in the victora, "and so you'll pardon me for kidnapping you. There's a little matter I'd like to talk over with you besides, and if you can spare the time from your clients we'd like to have you dine with us to-morrow evening."

Miss Prudence Grimes had round gray eyes and long black lashes. She had dark hair that came curving down caressingly over a low forehead, and a chin that was just a shade less saucy than the nose that pointed up the veriest trifle out of the horizontal. Her figure was of that rounded slenderness that distinguishes American women from all others of the world, and her raiment so perfectly harmonized with the charms of her person that Dexter strove in vain the rest of the day to remember of a single item of it in detail.

"And I do hope, Mr. Dexter, that you'll find time to tell me of the many funny experiences you must have in court."

Most of Dexter's funny experiences had consisted of taking testimony in shorthand to eke out his scanty fees, but he said that he would come, nevertheless, and do his best to entertain Miss Prudence.

In fact, as he lounged on the cushioned seat of the victoria as it rolled up the street and looked at this wonderful young person's dancing eyes, he wondered just what particular breed of wild horses would be strong enough to hold him back, once his footsteps were turned in the direction of the Grimes establishment just around the corner from Central Park West, in the Eighties.

He was set down at the door of his uncle's house, where he had been summoned by that irascible old gentleman on a matter of business. Then, returning to the office, he had spent the afternoon industriously trying to recall the details of his conversation with Miss Prudence and her father, and to picture in his mind the young lady's features, which were of a quality that seemed to defy intimate recollection.

That night he had spent at his club, playing billiards very badly and disgusting his fellow players by asking "What did you say?" whenever they addressed him.

And now he was walking up Fifth avenue, wondering what he should say to the young lady when next he should see her, and whether he could make her understand that he was really not such a dull fellow as he seemed.

With these fancies filling his thoughts he mechanically admitted himself with his latchkey to Gerald Brown's brownstone house on Madison avenue, mounted the stairs to the second floor, passing in front of the door to his uncle's library on the way to his own room.

Just as he was about to lay hold of the knob to enter his chamber he was startled to hear voices proceeding, apparently, from the library.

This was something he could not understand, for old Brown had few visitors at most, and never any at this hour, which was hard on midnight.

He stood still and listened. There could be no doubt about the voices, which now rose to a higher pitch. Could his uncle have fallen ill, and now be in the hands of a doctor? Dexter stepped to the library door and tried it softly. It was locked from the inside.

His curiosity now gave way to alarm. This must be a burglary, and something must be done or the house would be looted. He took one step toward the telephone and then halted, horrified. From within the room came a sound of scuffling feet, a thud, as if a blow had been struck, an interval of silence, and then one loud, fearful scream that sent the blood surging back on Dexter's heart and left him for the moment limp and helpless.

Then a silence, like that of a tomb, fell upon the place.

CHAPTER II.

The Voice in the Wall.

A GUST of wind caught the dwindling flame and puffed it out. Dexter stood a second fumbling in his pocket for another match, then he remembered that the servant's bell was within reach, and, stooping down beside the chair that held the dead man, he pressed it.

He could hear the bell jingling downstairs in the old butler's room, and the halls re-echoed with the sound, but for what seemed an hour there was no response. Nervously playing a tattoo on the button the young man waited, not venturing to examine his ghastly discovery further without the aid of a light.

At length he heard the stairs creaking with the weight of old Smithson, and without any more caution than he had shown when he had made his abrupt entrance over the transom, began to call to him.

The sound of steps ceased, and there ensued a silence. The old man was endeavoring to fathom the secret of this mysterious call. Dexter was about to shout again to him, when he appeared to satisfy himself that it was all right, and began to thump heavily back down the stairs, returning presently with the candle lighted, as the man in the room could perceive by the glow which began to glimmer through the transom.

He had not left the side of his uncle's chair since he had summoned the butler, but now, recollecting that the door was locked, he groped his way across the room and shot back the bolt, a ponderous affair, which Dexter remembered had excited his curiosity the first time he had seen it.

The old man was now at the door, and the candle was trembling in his palsied hand.

"What is it, Mr. Dexter?" he asked, in an excited whisper, "is Mr. Brown ill, sir?"

"I am afraid it's worse than that, Smithson," replied Dexter, "there have been burglars here, and I fear they've done mischief. For Heaven's sake, don't ask any more questions, but bring that light in here quick, and keep cool."

He caught the candle from the hesitating servant and strode with it across the room to the side of the chair.

Smithson followed, haltingly, peering through the shadows that danced and flickered across the floor and over the massive oaken furniture in response to the leaping flame of the taper.

At first his rheumy eyes could make nothing out of the figure in the chair; then, as they grew accustomed to the dim light, the object became plain to them—the supine form of the dead man, with eyes wide open and staring, it seemed to Smithson, directly at him.

With a little cry of fear he sank down, a helpless heap on the floor, unheeded by Dexter, who was bending eagerly over his uncle.

Setting the candle on a little table on which Brown kept his pipes and tobacco, Dexter began a hurried examination. At first he was able to discover no signs of a blow. Strangulation was out of the question, for the face was ashen white. No pistol wound showed either on the face or the breast, and the first examination of the clothing failed to disclose either rent or tear.

The young man paused a moment, puzzled. Then, determined to know as much as possible about the crime before he set about the already too long-delayed duty of running down the criminals, he tore off the coat and vest, and his eye was instantly arrested by a bright spot on the flannel shirt which old Brown wore in his hours of ease. It had been rent as by a needle, and underneath it was a tiny wound, from which the blood was slowly oozing. It was such a wound as a surgeon would make with a probe, the blow of a man practiced in the arts of death, who knew where the heart beat, and how to still it.

The surpassing skill with which the murder had been done astounded and dismayed the young man. Here had worked a murderer who knew his horrible trade as few could know it. And with such skill as this in the commission of a crime, what would be his cleverness in escaping its consequences?

"I've loitered too long already," cried Dexter. "I must hunt him down. What possessed me not to find the scoundrel when I had him?"

He rose to his feet and turned. "Come on, Smithson," he said. "I'll need you."

But Smithson was not to be counted upon. He still lay unconscious on the floor, breathing heavily, and neither shaking nor shouting could arouse him.

"I guess a little brandy will revive him," thought Dexter, and gathering the old man up like a child, carried him to the adjoining room, and taking a bottle from a liquor case, poured half of its contents down his throat.

The butler's eyes opened slowly and he muttered incoherently, but although Dexter continued to ply him with the spirit it had no other effect than to produce a curious intoxication, which had an uncanny manifestation like that of insanity. Smithson's mutterings grew louder, he writhed on the bed where Dexter had laid him, and finally broke out into a demonical yell.

"He's stark mad!" said Dexter, despairing. "If I accomplish anything here I must do it myself, and heaven knows it's time."

Thinking to brace his own nerves, which now were singing like bowstrings, he drank the remaining liquor and dashed downstairs to the telephone.

Calling up the nearest police station, he answered as briefly and intelligently as he could the close questioning of the desk sergeant.

"Come as quick as you can," he said, giving the house address, "my uncle has been murdered. I'll explain particulars when you get here.

"All right," came the answer. "Leave the front door unlocked, so we can get in, and go back to the room where the body is and stay there. Don't let any one get out of it. They're still in there all right, I guess."

Dexter leaped up the stairs, leaving the receiver still swinging by its wire cord.

The door of the library was creaking on its massive hinges as he passed through it, swinging idly in the wind that was now sweeping through the hall, proceeding apparently from an open window in the room.

Dexter paused a second on the threshold and suddenly a new horror overcame him.

Supposing the murderers or any trace of them could not be found! He alone had known of their presence. He was the heir to the dead man's property. Did there not exist such a case against him that any jury would hang him without leaving the box?

For the first time he felt his courage oozing from his finger tips. To face a murderer, against whom he might stand up in a fair fight, was one thing, to face a horrible suspicion, which would be almost impossible to shake off, was quite another.

What would old Grimes say when he heard the story? What would his daughter think of"——

"I must quit this sort of thing," he said, aloud, "or I'll be in the same boat with old Smithson," and he stepped resolutely into the room.

The candle still stood fluttering on the table where he had left it, and the shadows danced in time to it behind every chair and bookcase, but there was no figure reclining there before him. The body had been spirited away!

As he stood gazing in blank amazement there came a hollow tap from somewhere out of the darkness. Once, twice, three times it sounded, as if the spirit of the dead man was summoning him to a communication, such as he had beheld at a spiritualist seance his curiosity had led him to attend a few years before.

And then, as the room spun round and round in front of him, chairs, tables and pictures mingling in a mad whirl, he heard a voice say slowly and distinctly:

"Wait and you'll hear everything. Meddle, and you'll never leave this house."

The room reeled on, and then came dark. Dexter had gone the same road taken a few minutes before by the old butler.

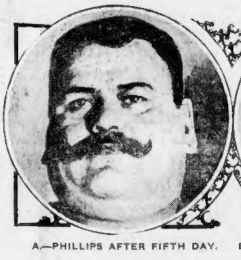
SAVED AS THE HAND OF DEATH WAS UPON HIM,

DESCRIBES HORRIBLE SENSATION OF STARVING

WHAT STARVATION DID TO J. C. PHILLIPS.



A.—PHILLIPS AFTER FIFTH DAY.

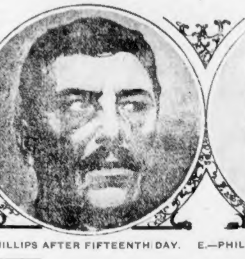
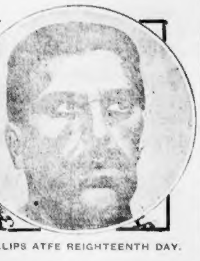
C.—PHILLIPS AFTER TWELFTH DAY.



D.—PHILLIPS AFTER FIFTEENTH DAY.



E.—PHILLIPS ATFE REIGHTEENTH DAY.

How it feels to starve is described for the BOSTON AMERICAN by John Clayton Phillips, formerly a man of wealth, who, through adversity, was recently brought face to face with death in New York, going for eighteen long days with nothing to eat but an occasional crust of bread. Just as he was lapsing into unconsciousness in an East Side garret, he was rescued by a friend. He gives the following impressive story of his sufferings:

BY JOHN CLAYTON PHILLIPS.

You ask me to describe as best I can the terrible agonies I suffered while slowly starving to death. Since my lot has fallen in better lines I have tried to eliminate from my mind all memories of those bitter days, yet every detail is as clear, as terribly acute, as it was then, and while I am disinclined to set them down coldly on paper I feel that perchance science may be the gainer, so I yield.

It would be superfluous perhaps to go into the events immediately preceding my prostration—it would be merely the record of hundreds of poor unfortunates, out of work, too proud to beg, to honest to steal. Suffice to say that after days and days of wandering, with an occasional meal, I eventually succumbed to weakness, and one morning was unable to leave my garret lodgings.

I remember that morning well. A strange weakness oppressed me. I did not wish to move. All day I lay there. The sun shone dimly through the grimy window, and finally the shades came, and I knew it was night. Then I must have fallen asleep, and the next I knew another day had dawned, and found me crawling on my hands and knees about the garret. Joy! I found half a piece of mouldy bread. I clutched it in my hands and crawled to my cot.

Four Days in a Stupor.

With a fierce suspicion that some one would try and take it away from me, I clutched it tight. For hours I gazed at it. Just gazed. This was food! This was bread, bread! Perhaps you have never been starving and cannot understand just what that meant to me. But I understood. I knew it was a piece of mouldy bread. Could I ask more?

I divided it into thirds, and each morning when the sunlight came in through the window I ate a piece. Three days and then it was gone. I tried to rise to find another piece, but I could not move. With a sigh of terror I sank back on my cot, and waited for death. Four days I lay thus in a sort of stupor. I say a sort because my mind seemed to work intelligently. I can remember muttering to myself—"this death is not so terrible." But death remained afar and as another day passed I began to grow irritable in a dull way. I began to fear the suggestion of strange visions that frequently would flash across my numbed brain. I wanted to die before they were made plain. But it was not to be.

A Dry, Rattling Scream.

One morning I passed my hand over my face. Was that my face, my hand? So drawn, so boney! Something, a great shape of light, I know not what—I know it was fearful, shot across my brain, and my lips opened in a dry, rattling scream, which I seemed to hear rather than utter. My eyes fluttered under the influence of strange bluish lights, and I sought to rise that I might hurl myself from the window. But I was too weak. And the visions increased in grotesque horror day by day.

For the most part, physical pain was lacking, except a great burning in my throat and stomach and a throbbing in my brain. The sensations were chiefly centred in my mind, in terrible imaginings, apparitions and sudden flashes of light. But finally languor came again, and as I lay on my couch music seemed to fill the room, and beautiful scenes and whisperings of comfort were breathed into my ear. My body seemed to be resting on nothing—floating, and at times my soul seemed trying to tear itself away from it.

Saw Death Coming.

Thus I lay, quiet. Eighteen days had passed. I was not able to stir a finger, and I thought, "this is death." While thus happy in the thought there came again those terrible flashes of blue light, increasing at the last in such startling succession that in a frenzy of fright I tried to give up my soul in one great frenzied scream. Its piercing volume frightened even me, but it did more, it brought my searching friend, and when I sank back on the cot apparently lifeless I was in his arms and brandy was being forced down my throat.

PRAISE PRIEST ON MATRIMONY

Fr. Walsh's Views Endorsed by Clergy Regardless of Creed.

BUT FEW MAKE FREE OFFER

The views on matrimony so frankly expressed in a sermon by Rev. Fr. Thomas Walsh, of Roxbury, in which he urged the young men of his parish to marry, offering to do a little matchmaking for the bashful men if necessary and to perform the wedding ceremony without pay, are generally approved by the clergy of the city, regardless of denomination, although some of the ministers do not go as far as Fr. Walsh in the way of proposals by proxy.

In Fr. Walsh's church, Miss Mary Marshall, young and charming, says Fr. Walsh, is just lovely, and the young men of the present generation are altogether too slow.

The Clergy Approves.

Rev. H. W. Ewing, Winthrop Street Methodist Episcopal Church: A young man who reaches the age of twenty-five years ought to be in a position to marry and support a wife respectably.

Rev. John O. Haarvig, Allston Congregational Church: Although I would be glad to see more marriages in my parish, I am content to let nature take care of herself in this matter.

Rev. J. N. Supple, Charlestown: The Catholic Church is ever urging its young men and women to marry. I am of the opinion that it is the duty of the young people to get married.

Rev. A. H. Nazarin, Mt. Bellingham Methodist Church: All young men who have fair prospects of obtaining a livelihood should get married.

Rev. F. W. Bakeman, First Baptist Church: I believe that young people are better off married than single.

The Real Solution.

Rev. Thomas Sims, D. D., Melrose Congregational Church: The reason why marriage is postponed to comparatively late age is, I suppose, prudential. Could we persuade our young people of both sexes to cultivate the ideal of simplicity of life we should go far to reach a solution of the marriage question.

WEDDING IS HALTED AT ALTAR BY INSANE WOMAN

DUBUQUE, Ia., May 11.—Standing by the altar, with the priest ready to pronounce them man and wife, the wedding of Miss Mary Hartwan and Frank J. Erick was interrupted by Mrs. R. C. Ruscht, a demented woman, who shouted "Stop the marriage, stop the marriage." The bride-elect fainted. The excited woman was removed from the church and the priest concluded the ceremony.

POLICE TO EXTRADITE HORTON.

BROCKTON, May 11.—Steps to secure the extradition of Joseph M. Horton, held at Portland, Ore., charged with larceny from Franklin Gardner, will be taken at once.

WON HIS BRIDE IN BEACHMONT SURF

All Lynn Interested in Romance Which Will End in Simpson-Dixon Wedding.

All Lynn is interested in the wedding, to take place June 9, of Colin J. Simpson and Miss Lillian M. Dixon, the young woman whom he so heroically rescued from drowning at Beachmont on July 18, 1901. Simpson received two medals and a watch for his daring act of bravery, but he cared nothing for these; he wanted the girl whom he had saved.

Preparations for the wedding are fast on the way, and congratulations will soon be in order from all who have followed the course of this most interesting romance.

PARTIES TO LYNN ROMANCE.

HEARST WINS IN PORTLAND

PORTLAND, Me., May 11.—The Democratic ward caucuses to choose delegates to the district convention, which is to elect delegates to the St. Louis gathering, resulted in victories for William R. Hearst. The Hearst supporters claim the delegates in all but one of the nine wards. Dr. S. C. Gordon, one of the leading gold Democrats of the State, who was a delegate to the National convention at Kansas City in 1900, and two years ago a candidate for Congress on the Democratic ticket, was defeated by a Hearst man for a place on the delegation from Ward 5 by a single vote.

SEC. TAFT IS VICTIM OF SOCIETY LIVER

COMPLAINT; TOO MANY DINNERS HARMFUL TO THE LIVER

By Boston American Leased Wire.

WASHINGTON, May 11.—Secretary of War Taft is the latest high official to succumb to "society liver." He was not able to attend the cabinet meeting to-day, and was too ill to go to the department. It was announced that he had a cold, and was suffering from a bad throat, but those who are familiar with the burden of social duties imposed on Mr. Taft since he became Secretary of War say his illness is the result of too many dinners and receptions.

Secretary Taft came to Washington in January. He had been rushed across the Pacific on fast steamer, and started East from San Francisco on a special train. He reached Washington out of breath, as it were, but ready to plunge into the duties of the war portfolio.

Before even reporting to the President he was buried with invitations and was just given time to change his travelling costume for evening clothes to be hustled off to a dinner at the Willard. The next night it was a dinner at the Arlington and then at the Shoreham. These were followed by scores of private dinners, and when Mrs. Taft and the children arrived these were renewed. Sometimes the secretary was obliged to go to one dinner while his wife went to another.

Mr. Taft's recent trip to St. Louis was another round of similar functions.

"Uncle Joe" Cannon was among the first this winter to sound a note of warning, and he said at one time that he must either give up the speakership or dining out.

COAL BARONS MUST ANSWER

By Boston American Leased Wire.

NEW YORK, May 11.—The mandate of the United States Supreme Court ordering the coal magnates to appear and answer questions in the suit instituted by William R. Hearst against the Coal Trust, has been handed down at Washington and sent to this city for enforcement.

It requires the coal men to pay all costs of the appeal to the Supreme Court, the amount being fixed at $1,863.

In compliance with the mandate, orders were served last night on attorneys for the defendants directing the production of the books of the Temple Iron Company, and of contracts by all members of the Coal Trust. A list of questions is also submitted. The order was prepared by Clarence J. Shearn, attorney for Mr. Hearst. Lawyers for the defendants will make whatever suggestions they propose and the orders will be signed by Judge Lacombe on Thursday and then served on the defendants.

The Interstate Commerce Commission will sit in New York on May 24 to hear the witnesses and inspect the books thus produced.

PASTOR TO BE DIPPED AGAIN

The Rev. Edward Hersey Brewster must be baptized again and received into the membership of the Baptist Church before he can be ordained as pastor of the First Baptist Church at Manchester by the Sea, to which he was recently called.

Members of the church filled the auditorium last evening to witness the ordination ceremonies that did not take place. The church council of the Salem district had but a few hours previously decided that while Mr. Brewster was a member of the Bethany Free Baptist Church at Whitman he was not a member of their own faith. They ordered the ceremony not to proceed.

Rev. Mr. Brewster, who is still in the twenties, is at present a student at the Boston University. He made such an impression by his eloquence and earnestness in his first appearance in Manchester that he was called to the First Church from Whitman.

A new date will be set for the services postponed last evening as soon as the minister has fulfilled the conditions of the Baptist creed.

GOSLIN GETS REVENGE IN RUIN OF OPERATORS

EVENING UP SCORE WITH WALL STREET FOR SENDING HIM TO PRISON.

By Boston American Leased Wire.

NEW YORK, May 11.—Alfred R. Goslin has had his revenge. After he came out of the penitentiary for circulating false reports about Brooklyn Rapid Transit stock he declared that he would even up the score with Wall Street, and that many of its operators would suffer heavy financial loss for sending him to prison.

Since then his activity has been great, though secret. Several times certain firms in the street have complained bitterly that Goslin had eaten into their gold reserves.

Now the ruin of the big brokerage firm of Floyd, Crawford & Co., with twelve branches, more than $20,000 of the liabilities and 7,000 miles of leased wires, has been directly ascribed to Goslin.

"Alfred R. Goslin laid a snare for those who sold short the shares of the Light, Fuel & Power Company of West Virginia," declared A. S. Floyd today. "We are going to fight to show that Goslin was back of the game, and we intend to show the whole thing up in court."

Other firms are involved. Certain interests in the street are in panic. Exposure as bucket shoppers faces them. Seven brokers have been expelled from the Consolidated Stock Exchange. Two of the most noted speculators on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange are in peril.

At the height of his success Goslin has suddenly left town. The Light, Fuel & Power stock is in a few hands friendly to Goslin. Heavy buying orders for it exist, and the brokerage firms cannot deliver the stock because Goslin won't give it to them.

The letters of Miss Merkley, whose picture is printed above, and Miss Claussen, prove beyond question that thousands of cases of inflammation of the ovaries and womb are annually cured by the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—Gradual loss of strength and nerve force told me something was radically wrong with me. I had severe shooting pains throught the pelvic organs, cramps and extreme irritation compelled me to seek medical advice. The doctor said that I had ovarian trouble and ulceration, and advised an operation. I strongly objected to this and decided to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I soon found that my judgment was correct, and that all the good things said about this medicine were true, and day by day I felt less pain and increased appetite. The ulceration soon healed, and the other complications disappeared and in eleven weeks I was once more strong and vigorous and perfectly well.

"My heartiest thanks are sent to you for the great good you have done me."—Sincerely yours, MISS MARGARET MERKLEY, 275 Third St., Milwaukee, Wis.

Miss Claussen Saved from a Surgical Operation.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—It seems to me that all the endorsements that I have read of the value of Lydia E. Pinkham's Compound do not express one-half of the virtue the great medicine really possesses. I know that it saved my life and I want to give the credit where it belongs. I suffered with ovarian trouble for five years, had three operations and spent hundreds of dollars on doctors and medicines but this did not cure me after all.

"However, what doctors and medicines failed to do, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did. Twenty bottles restored me to perfect health and I feel sure that had I known of its value before, and let the doctors alone, I would have been spared all the pain and expense that fruitless operations cost me. If the women who are suffering, and the doctors do not help them, will try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, they will not be disappointed with the results."—MISS CLARA M. NO CITY JUNKET FOR COMMISSION FROM PHILIPPINES

WASHINGTON SURPRISED

The refusal by Mayor Collins and the Chamber of Commerce to entertain the Philippine commissioners now on their way to visit this country has caused a stir in high official circles in Washington. President Roosevelt and Secretary of War Taft were greatly surprised to learn the contents of the reply of the city of Boston to the suggestion that the fifty commissioners be banquetted while in Boston, as in New York and other large cities, and in St. Louis during their visit to the exposition.

Mayor Collins, however, is quite satisfied with the stand he has taken and sees no reason for changing his mind on the matter. He fails to see why the money of the taxpayers should be used to entertain a commission which is purely commercial.

Mayor Collins, writing to Colonel Clarence Edwards, chief of staff of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, said:

"As the Philippine commissioners represent purely commercial bodies, it is my opinion that any courtesies extended to them should be by commercial bodies.

"I cannot see how the municipality can possibly be involved in their reception and entertainment, and, in the present state of its finances, I do not feel warranted in incurring the expenditure."

KIDNAPS U. S. GIRL IN AUTO

CONSUL GOWDY AIDS HER

LONDON, May 11.—The Paris correspondent of the Daily Mail relates a remarkable adventure which, he says, befell an unnamed American woman who went to Paris from London a fortnight ago to seek a singing engagement. She is described as being twenty-five years old, good looking an a native of Georgia.

In Paris she met a wealthy man, whom she had known in London.

He proposed marriage to her, but she refused him. She consented, however, to make an excursion into the country with him in his automobile. They went to a village beyond Versailles and alighted at a house. She entered a room, but when she tried to leave she found the door locked. Her cries for help were unanswered. She was forced to remain in the place for three days, when she escaped from a window and started, as she believed, for Paris, on foot. She only had a little money, and reached Dreux, twenty-five miles distant, penniless. There she was sent to jail.

There she wrote to Consul-General Gowdy, who sent a representative who procured her immediate release. The representative escorted her to Paris, where she was placed in a public institution pending the conclusion of arrangements to send her back to the United States.

EAST BOSTON AROUSED BY ATTEMPTED GASTON FRANCHISE GRAB.

CITIZENS DEMAND ADEQUATE PAYMENT FOR FRANCHISES.

THE people of Boston insist that no franchise of any kind shall be given to any corporation unless adequate compensation is given to the city.

Aroused by the expose in the BOSTON AMERICAN of the attempted "grab," made by the Massachusetts Wharf Trust Company to secure a franchise to lay tracks through three miles of East Boston without paying one cent for it to the city, the residents of that section are up in arms and are banding themselves together to frustrate the efforts of this corporation, which has petitioned the Board of Aldermen for a valuable right they want free of charge. Although the franchise would, in time, increase the value of property along the route of the proposed spur track, it will immediately benefit a number of powerful corporations, besides the concern incorporated in Delaware for the express purpose of getting the "grab," namely, the Standard Oil Company, the East Boston Gas Company, the Boston Elevated Road, and several other powerful corporations.

William A. Gaston, former candidate for Governor on the Democratic ticket, representative of all large corporate matters at the State House, and counsel to some of the largest trusts in the city, has been retained as counsel by this petitioning concern. He intends to secure for his client the franchise, without paying one cent for it, but before any action is taken by the Railroad Committee of the Board of Aldermen, to which body the petition has been referred, a public hearing will be given on the matter at the City Hall.

Boston Needs the Money.

This franchise is worth thousands of dollars to the city, and to-day Boston's financial condition is none too good. It needs money for its parks and numerous improvements, but still this trust petitions to get a franchise that will mean thousands and thousands of dollars to it and other corporations.

Ex-Alderman James F. Nolan, of East Boston, has entered a vigorous protest against the granting of the franchise, declaring that it is a grab and a steal, and should not go through. He has a petition, signed by hundreds of East Boston residents, urging the Board of Aldermen not to grant the franchise, and he declares he will fight the Massachusetts Wharf Trust Company to the bitter end to defeat its purpose.

When a hearing was given on the petition, ex-Alderman Nolan appeared at the last moment, just when the measure was about to pass, and after a spirited battle, had it referred to the Committee on Railroads, which decided that, in justice to all, a public hearing should be given.

The date of the public hearing has not yet been set, but it is expected to be held within a few weeks, and then delegations of East Bostonians will make every effort to prevent the grab.

Ex-Alderman Nolan Talks.

Ex-Alderman Nolan said to an AMERICAN reporter to-day:

"It is high time the city officials took some action to thwart these foreign corporations in their attempts to secure valuable franchises without paying for them. Here is a body of men, none of them known in Boston, who petition the board for a franchise that means thousands and thousands of dollars in their pockets. It is bad enough to grant franchises to men of the city who never pay anything for them, but here is a corporation organized in Delaware that comes here and wants this valuable right. Then these people are without any financial standing whatever. Then, again, the people, as a whole, are bitterly opposed to it. The working man who owns his little house along the line of this proposed track will have his taxes increased and the lives of his little ones endangered with these freight cars running through three miles of the East Boston streets.

"The people are also paying large sums of money to abolish grade crossings. Why make more grade crossings, which will undoubtedly be done if this franchise is granted. The people also see, in addition to this grab, a job for the sale of the Boston Elevated Railroad Company's property on East Eagle street, through which property the road intends to run.

"But by far the strongest reason the people have for opposing this grab is that they feel the day for giving corporations, monopolies and over-capitalized trust companies franchises for nothing, is at an end, and more attention must be paid to the wants of the common people."

Brown Says No Graft.

Wendell F. Brown, President of the Massachusetts Wharf Trust Company, declared to an AMERICAN reporter that this concern was not the only one to benefit by the franchise, as scores of others along the route of the proposed track will save thousands of dollars each year.

"On the East Boston water front there are scores of lumber merchants, iron foundries, machine shops and manufactories of all kinds. This spur track, running from the Boston and Albany depot at Chelsea right across the island would save them thousands of dollars in freighting.

Mr. Brown has hinted at graft among the politicians, but he declared to-day that he will not give up one cent to anybody to effect the granting of the franchise.

TACKLE THE GREAT NEW BRICK PUZZLE AND SEND YOUR ANSWER NOW

"HOW OLD IS ANN?" A QUESTION OF THE PAST, NEW PROBLEM IS BETTER.

NOW is the time to solve the great brick puzzle!

The discussion is at its height, the contestants have got their second wind and are tackling the proposition in grim, deadly earnest.

Figuratively speaking, there are bricks in the air, whole ones, halves, quarters, eighths and fragments. The Russo-Jap war is forgotten in the more exciting battles of intellects being waged right here in New England.

And it all revolves around this problem:

IF A BRICK WEIGHS SEVEN POUNDS AND A HALF A BRICK, HOW MUCH DOES A BRICK AND A HALF WEIGH?

Can YOU tell?

If so, mail your solution to the Puzzle Editor, BOSTON AMERICAN. Join the procession.

Here is a new batch of answers:

Letter X at Work Here.

Let X equal number of pounds in one brick.

½ X plus 7 equals X.
X plus 14 equals 2 X.
Minus X equals minus 14.
X equals 14 pounds in one brick.

Worcester.

He Hits Twenty-one, Too.

Puzzle Editor—My solution for your problem in to-night's paper of the "brick and a half" is as follows:

$7 + \frac{X}{2} = X$

$14 + X = 2X$

$14 = X$

$X = 14$

$X + \frac{X}{2} = 21$

My answer therefore is 21 pounds.

Whitinsville. TOM REID.

He Puts In an "If."

Puzzle Editor—If the brick problem is read to mean that a brick weighs 7 pounds plus the weight of half a brick, the solution is as follows:

Let X = weight of brick

Then $X = 7 + \frac{1}{2}X$

$\frac{1}{2}X = 7$

$X = 14$ lbs., weight of brick.

$\frac{3}{2}X = 21$ lbs., weight of brick and a half.

But if it means that the brick weighs 7½ pounds, then the answer of course is 11¼.

Another Brick Puzzle.

Puzzle Editor: The answer to your brick puzzle is twenty-one pounds. Because if a brick weighs seven pounds and a half a brick the half brick is equal to half of the whole brick and the seven pounds to the other half. So that makes the whole brick fourteen pounds and the brick and a half twenty-one pounds.

Only Flunked Once?

Puzzle Editor: I flunked on my last math. exam. I wish it were as easy as your brick problem. A brick weighs 7 pounds and half a brick. Halves of a whole are each other. This One Not a Chestnut.

Puzzle Editor: To me the puzzle looks the same as the old chestnut, "If a hen and a half lays an egg and a half in a day and a half, how many eggs will twelve hens lay in twelve days?" My answer to this is twelve eggs.

My answer to your puzzle is seven pounds.

Solution: A brick and a half weighs seven pounds and a half a brick. One brick will weigh two-thirds of seven pounds, or four and two-thirds pounds; and a half a brick would weigh two and one-third pounds, making a total of seven pounds for a brick and a half. FRANK J. KELLY.

Speaks for Itself.

Puzzle Editor: Dear Sir:

I would like you to glance at the following solution of your "puzzle," which I now respectfully submit:

$X = 7 + \frac{1}{2}$

$2X = 14 + X$

$2X - X = 14$

$X = 14$

$X = 14$

$14 + (14 \div 2) = 21$. Answer.

JOSEPH WALKER.

Just Reasons It Out.

Puzzle Editor: Dear Sir: The number giving the total weight of one brick must be such that its half of the weight added to 7 will give said total weight. The only number that will give above results is 14, because its half, 7, added to 7, will equal 14. If a brick weighs 14 pounds, and half a brick weighs 7, then a brick and a half will weigh 21 pounds.

This is hardly a puzzle, as far as I can see, but it takes reasoning before understanding the proper way of solving it.

Dan Calls It 10½.

Puzzle Editor: A brick and a half will weigh 10½ pounds, as two-thirds of the weight of your brick and a half was 7 pounds, and the other one-third a half a brick. So if two of the three thirds going to make a brick and a half weigh 7 pounds, the other one-third must weigh one-half as much as the other two. Hence your brick and a half should weigh 10½ pounds. DAN.

Quincy House.

Gets it Same Both Ways.

Puzzle Editor:

Question.—If a brick weighs seven pounds and one half brick, how much will a brick and a half weigh?

1st solution. One brick consists of two halves, but one brick weighs 7 pounds and ½ brick, hence, $\frac{2}{2}$ = 7½ lbs., or ½ = 7 lbs.

$\frac{2}{3}$ = 21 lbs. Ans.

2nd solution.—Let X = weight of ½ brick. 2X = weight of brick. 3X = weight of 1½ brick, now 2X = 7 lbs. + X and X = 7 — 2X = 14 + 3X = 21 lbs. Ans.

If I had my grandmother's scales from Way Down East I could explain it easier. However, it goes this way: Admitting that a brick weighs 7 pounds and a half a brick on my grandmother's scales then, if I add one-half brick with the whole brick I will certainly have to add the same on the other side, making 7 pounds and one brick, which is the answer.

Hopes Both Are Right.

Puzzle Editor: Having tried your puzzle I found that I could do it in algebra two ways, one way getting 11¼ for an answer, and another 7½. The 11¼, I think, is right. Hoping that it is right, also the 7½, I remain, C. S. S.

X = weight of a brick.

$\frac{X}{2} = \frac{1}{2}$ brick.

$X + \frac{X}{2} = \frac{45}{4}$

$2X + X = \frac{90}{4}$

$3X = \frac{90}{4}$

$X = 7\frac{1}{2}$

$X + \frac{X}{2} = 11\frac{1}{4}$.

Another From South Boston.

Puzzle Editor: My solution of the brick puzzle: I take the question, "What is the weight of a brick and a half?" If the whole brick weighs seven pounds and one-half, the half of a brick must weigh three pounds and three-quarters; now, seven and three make ten, and one-half and three quarters make one and one-quarter, making in all eleven pounds and one-quarter. Reminds One of Herring.

Puzzle Editor: If a brick weighs 7 pounds and a half brick, a brick and a half will weigh 10½ pounds. E. G. S.

Yours puts me in mind of another. If a herring and a half cost a penny and a half, what will two herrings cost?

POLICE NEWS ITEMS.

Inspector Morris Wolff celebrates his fifteenth anniversary of service on the police force to-day, and is kept busy receiving the congratulations of his friends. For eight years he has done duty in the inspectors' department, generally as the pawnshop expert. When a patrolman he was stationed at the Hanover street station. He is the only Hebrew inspector and is the linguist of the department, speaking four languages fluently.

After a continuous service of twenty-six years, Patrolman McHenry was placed on the retired list yesterday, at his own request. As the guardian of the "Mayor's Gate" at the City Hall, he is one of the best known policemen in the city. Among the politicians who frequent the hall of the city fathers, he has a wide acquaintance, and much regret was expressed when it was learned that he would guard the sacred portals no longer.

Inspector Cronin has received many congratulations on account of the clever manner in which he tracked the assailant of Frank Allen, the janitor of a Northampton street building, who was assaulted and robbed Saturday night. Cronin had only a meagre description, but succeeded in landing his man within forty-eight hours.

Inspector Rooney, the millionaire of the department, has been Wolff's partner for more than seven years. There is not a pawnshop in the city which has not been the subject of their ministrations at one time or another, and through their efforts many thousands of dollars worth of goods have been recovered.

There are rumors of another big shift in the department. It is said that some of the captains who have done excellent work in cleaning up the districts which have been considered the toughest, will be "rewarded" by having other sections where crime and vice are rampant, put under their control.

White helmets in a few days. Twelve large cases arrived at headquarters yesterday, ranging in size from small fives to large tens. It is said that "big head" is not so prevalent on the force since Judge Emmons took the reins, and that the smaller sizes are more in demand.

WATER FRONT NOTES.

Commissioner of Immigration Billings has quite a collection of curiosities on exhibition at his office at Long Wharf, among which are a number of knives and pieces of rope by which the detained immigrants have tried to escape from the detention pen.

Captain Samuel Harris, weigher's clerk at the Custom House, is one of the oldest men in the custom service. He is an old seafaring man, and has had many narrow escapes in wrecks. He entertains his comrades during their leisure moments with stories of his trips at sea. The captain has made many friends since he has been in the service.

Captain James Perry of the harbor tug Dolphin is one of the most popular men in the towboating business. Captain Perry was formerly chief mate on the Red Star Company's boats, and also held the berth of chief officer on the handsome steam yacht Dreamer, owned by Thomas W. Lawson.

As yet none of the mackerel seining schooners have reached this port, and for that reason the speckled beauties are very scarce. A few mackerel have been sent shipped here from New York, but not enough to satisfy the demand.

Houseboating is fast becoming a fad among the Summer residents in Massachusetts Bay, and several orders have been given the local shipyards for them.

An amusing scene took place at the White Star dock. It happened that the steamer Romanic brought over two people by the name of Maria Vercelli, one of whom had not seen her brother since childhood. The roll call rang out "Maria Vercelli." Out of the crowd of immigrants came the Italian maiden, beaming with delight. The waiting brother, supposing it was his sister, showered her with kisses. Finally a mistake was discovered, and poor Vercelli had loved the wrong girl. However, he did not mind the error, for when the right Maria appeared he went on his way rejoicing.

Immigration and custom officials have great reason to feel jubilant over the new order which has just been issued from Washington, by which they are not compelled to examine passengers or baggage arriving on steamers from Canadian ports.

A Modern Society Divorce

A SOCIAL SCANDAL.

ONE of our new millionaires divorced his first wife. It took the judge just thirty minutes in which to issue a decree of divorce and four days later he was married to wife No. 2. The first wife got one million dollars alimony. The second wife got one million in bridal gifts—then came a town house, a country house and a yacht and use for other millions. Certainly our plain American life is fast departing when men and women in our great cities spend millions for divorce and millions to get into so-called society. It only proves the truth that millions do not bring contentment for men and women are happier who practice the simple life, who live simple, homely lives—lives given to love, to unselfish devotion to husband, wife and family. Fortunately the great majority of our American people are educated, are plain, forceful, thinking people. The women who love their home life, their sweet evenings at home with their family are the ones to be admired and to be loved by their husbands, and we find here that true devotion presides at the family fireside. The strength of our American people rests with the sensible mothers who give to the world strong, robust children, untainted by impoverished blood. Unfortunately these are exceptions, mostly in our metropolitan cities of domestic upheavals and uncongenial married lives, and this is the fault of men or women who live selfish lives of pleasure and vanity, together with the race after the society bauble, the eating of late suppers, unwholesome meals, and hours spent in illy ventilated rooms without the proper exercise in the good, fresh air. Women at some period of life are great sufferers, either in maidenhood, motherhood, or later, at the change of life.

AN UNDESERVED SENTENCE.

Our modern law courts and methods of administering justice are the result of long years of gradual development and evolution, and are probably as near infallible as any institution of man's creation can be. Occasionally justice is not done, and the innocent suffer, but these mishaps are rare. There are many women to-day who are perfectly innocent of wrong doing, sentenced to long years of suffering and distress, banished from the enjoyments of society and a burden to themselves and friends, simply because they are afflicted with disease and displacement of the womanly organs. Ignorance of the laws of health and hygiene has led to indiscretions and exposure during critical periods of early life, and at the time when she is just rounding into the full glory of perfect womanhood she becomes a veritable slave to her pain-racked body, unable to do any work or play with satisfaction or pleasure, as truly a prisoner as though shut up within four walls. A great philosopher has said, "The Creator will forgive our sins, but we ourselves must settle for our blunders." And how true this is! No blunders require such severe toll as those we commit against our physical well-being. Wet feet, irregular meals, late hours, over work or over play all contribute to the general disturbance. There is no sufficient reason why such a vast proportion of our women should suffer as they do from female trouble. Dr. R. V. Pierce long ago appreciated the amount of avoidable suffering which exists, and he prepared a suitable medicine, in the form of his "Favorite Prescription," which should be especially adapted to the needs of women. It does not cure all diseases, nor is it recommended for them, but in the case of womanly weakness of any sort it is a wonderful cure. It balances the circulation, stopping weakening drains and pelvic congestion, and gives tone and vigor to the organs. It should be in every home, and will prevent much suffering and save many doctor bills. Dr. Pierce has devoted over forty years to the study of woman's ills and their treatment, and stands to-day as America's foremost specialist in woman's diseases, an impregnable position, won as it was by merit alone. A suffering woman may appreciate sympathy, but what she needs is advice and treatment to restore her to health again, and the hundreds of grateful women who write to Dr. Pierce daily, give ample testimony that his advice will do all that he claims.

Mrs. Ida A. Fesler, of Odon, Indiana, writes as follows: "In the spring of 1902, I was taken down sick with female trouble. "Consulted two good doctors, but they failed to do me any good. I was getting worse all the time, and in June I wrote to you. You advised me to use Dr. Pierce's medicines, which I did. Only used two bottles of the 'Favorite Prescription,' and it cured me entirely. I have waited to see the results. I am well and hearty to-day, thanks to your medicine. I hope this will bring some poor suffering woman to you for health and happiness."

Backed up by over a third of a century of remarkable and uniform cures, a record such as no other remedy for the diseases and weaknesses peculiar to women ever attained, the proprietors and makers of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription now feel fully warranted in offering to pay $500 in legal money of the United States for any case of Leucorrhea, Female Weakness, Prolapsus, or Falling of Womb, which they cannot cure. All they ask is a fair and reasonable trial of their means of cure.

A HAPPY MARRIAGE

depends very largely on the physical health of the contracting parties. Therefore, the best guide to life-long happiness is Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser, a book of 1008 pages, sent free by Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y., on receipt of 31 one-cent stamps, to pay postage only.

A FEW REMARKS BY AND TO MAYOR COLLINS ON BENCHES!

CITY'S EXECUTIVE SAYS THE PEOPLE DON'T NEED THEM—THE PEOPLE KNOW BETTER.

Mayor Collins was asked by a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter to-day what action he would take about putting more benches in the city parks, the Common and the Public Garden.

Mayor Collins gave utterance to some amazing remarks. He said:

"This thing of getting more seats on the Common and the Public Garden and other parks has been agitated for twenty-five or thiryt years. People are continually asking for it—that is, a few people but you must not take the demands of the few as the wishes of the many."

Letters from the people to the BOSTON AMERICAN indicate that Mayor Collins is wrong. It is the MANY, not the FEW, who want benches. The MANY—the people—have nowhere else to go for a brief breathing spell. The FEW—the rich few—have country homes and parks and gardens of their own. The parks belong to the MANY—the people—and if they want 500 or 2,000 benches it is the duty of Mayor Collins, who is a servant of the people, to give them what is wanted. It was THE MANY—the people—who have no place to sit and enjoy our beautiful parks—who elected Mayor Collins. And their wishes should be obeyed.

"You must remember that the Common and the Public Garden were not meant primarily for places to sit down and rest. They are places for people to walk through, to wander about in and enjoy, but not to loaf in."

If THE MANY—the poor people—are not allowed to "loaf in" the parks, where in the name of common sense can they go?

"Why, if we put seats enough there to satisfy everybody who has wandered through the Common and the Public Garden and wanted to sit down and couldn't, the places would be nothing but benches."

And on those benches would be seated women and children, who would thus be able to get a breath of pure air and a ray of sunshine.

"How many is it proposed that should be placed there in addition to those there now? I think I have heard the number as at least 2,000. That would be ridiculous. The authorities who are directly in charge of that matter are the Superintendent of Public Grounds and the Park Commission."

So Mayor Collins is directly in charge of the public parks. If he refuses to order more benches the people will know who is to blame.

"We have talked the matter over and have decided that there are enough seats there now. It comes up every year and we discuss it."

WE! The "three tailors of Tooley street" outdone! Comes up every year! Some year it will come up before a Mayor who will know what to do.

"Yes, this thing was agitated before you were born and I presume it will be after you and I are dead. Whether the petition of the people in that respect will ever be granted I can not say. I repeat that for all practical purposes, so far as I can see, there are enough seats there now."

Every petition of the people that is in the right, and is backed by the people, is finally granted, Mayor Collins!

"But you know that I am only the voice of the authorities—I'm telling you what they think as they have expressed it to me."

And the BOSTON AMERICAN is telling you, Mayor Collins, that the "voice of the people" is greater than the "voice of the authorities." The authorities are mere paid servants of the people, hired to do as the people wish. And the present wish and demand is for MORE BENCHES!

"Tramps" on Common Benches.

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

Now that the AMERICAN is advocating a scheme for more seats on the Common I beg to call attention to one phase of the situation there. I refer to the "tramp" nuisance. On the afternoon of Sunday I counted twenty-five or more "hoboes" on the Park and Beacon street malls alone. Several had entire possession of the benches, and their disreputable appearance as well as vulgar conversation made it quite impossible for respectable people to sit near them. I think the authorities would do well to rid the Common, and Public Garden also, of this "tramp" element. It is not so much the genuine "knights of the road" that are causing the trouble, as that class of "tramps" which Josiah Flint, the trampologist, would call "town bums." Let something be done immediately.

Revere. EUGENE B. WILLARD.

Estimate Is Low.

Editor AMERICAN:

I heartily wish to enter my approval of the good work the AMERICAN is doing in advocating more benches for the public parks of the city. It is a long felt want and now that the crusade has been started by your enterprising paper I have the greatest confidence that the city authorities will heed the cry of the people of this city and place more benches on the Common, Public Garden and other parks in and around the city.

The only objection I have is that your estimate of the number of seats wanted is rather low. It is my opinion that 8,000 or 10,000 benches are wanted. Furthermore they are expected by the people.

Roslindale. JOHN L. GREEN.

Give Mothers a Chance.

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

I notice that among the many people who have written you in regard to the extreme necessity of having more benches in the parks, few have mentioned the nee' of reserving seats for ladies and children. Really, this is a crying need. Well-to-do men and women do not know the suffering of the poor. But I know it. I know that when my wife and little ones take a stroll through the Common in order to escape the stifling air of the streets on a hot day, they have to keep strolling. They find all the seats taken by men. A seat, if they could have it only for a few moments, would be greatly appreciated by them. I am sure that many others feel the same way.

Richmond street, Boston. H. P. LORETTO.

Few Benches; No Comfort.

Editor AMERICAN:

I have travelled extensively and have found that good old Boston was backward only in one thing. Accommodations are lacking for the comfort of its people. We have good parks but the seats are too few and uncomfortable, as well. Why do not the city authorities take up the matter. I have talked with several politicians but with no result.

ROBERT DILLINGHAM.

Police Waking Up.

Editor AMERICAN:

I want to congratulate the AMERICAN in its movement to secure more benches in the parks. Already the police have begun to rout out the "regulars." Yesterday (Tuesday) morning, I noticed an officer awaken a "regular" who was asleep and send him on his way. It was a beautiful day to spend in the Gardens, and every one of the benches was occupied, while many had to stroll about unable to get seating accommodations. May they be forthcoming soon, thanks to the AMERICAN.

Boston. E. G. HYATT.

"More Benches, City Fathers."

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

Yesterday I walked through Boston Common and saw how crowded the benches were, and how many there were who could not find seats. There were many sitting there whom I had seen three or four hours earlier in the day. These had evidently been making the benches their home, not simply enjoying them as a resting place for which they were designed. There were three elderly women who wanted to "rest a bit," but they found no seats. How easily could Boston repair this wrong! Get more benches, City Fathers! It costs little to do it and it will doubly pay.

Dorchester. JAMES K. O'BRIEN.

Suggests Volunteer Brigade.

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

If those in charge of our public grounds cannot see their way clear to expending more money in procuring benches for the parks of the city, let them have their workmen employed about the parks lead a volunteer brigade who will solicit old benches or contributions to buy new benches. It is certainly most annoying when one travels some distance to sit in one of the parks, only to find that all the seats are taken and that one must keep walking and watching for a vacant seat. When a seat is vacated anybody who wants the place must jump lively or else lose it. In the case of getting a seat in any of the parks on fair nights the seat is really to the fleet.

South End. GEORGE MORRISSEY.

Parks Are the People's.

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

I am glad that you have taken up the task of securing more benches for the public parks of Boston. If the parks do not belong to the people, then to whom do they belong? I am sure they are not the private property of those who have power to provide more benches. I am also sure that Mayor Collins will see that this is done, for it will be a great blessing to the sweltering city during the hot days of Summer. Keep up the good work, Mr. Editor! The people are with you and you are sure to win.

CITIZEN OF WARD TWENTY-ONE.

The People's Champion.

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

The AMERICAN has struck a popular note in advocating more benches for the public parks. I wish to call particular attention to the lack of seating accommodations in the Fens. I am sure that there are hundreds more who would visit this breathing spot on Sundays if they could be seated. Good luck to the AMERICAN. It is surely the people's champion.

Boston. J. F. KINSLEY.

"Less Graft; More Benches."

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

Hats off to the BOSTON AMERICAN in its crusade for more benches for the parks of the city! If the grafting at the City Hall was stopped for just one hour there would be much saved to the city, and enough to secure the extra benches needed on both the Common and the Public Garden. It makes me sick to see all the politicians falling over one another to take the front in preaching economy when the people cry for anything like more benches, but if some private corporation is seeking a privilege there is a singular silence. At election time they tell what they have done for the people. Bah!

Cambridge street. HENRY RESIK.

For Good of the Masses.

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

Long life and prosperity to the AMERICAN. It is the determined stands such as you have made regarding the inadequacy of benches that make your paper the family paper of New England. Although I have no occasion to use the benches on the Common, yet I am speaking for the good of the masses. I trust that your efforts will be crowned with success.

Roxbury. JOHN L. HACKETT.

Please the Young Girls.

Editor Boston American: Although but a young girl of twelve, I trust that you will print my letter advocating more benches on the Common. After school every day I and my girl friends adjourn to the Common, there to sit beneath the trees and study. Often we are compelled to walk around because all the seats are taken. This is especially true on a hot day when all of the seats are taken by men who look like tramps. If more seats were placed on the Common, it would please thousands of young girls of this city. I trust that your efforts will be successful.

Huntington avenue. MADELINE WAY.

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN: Your appeal for more benches in Boston's parks should receive the endorsement of every citizen. But why have benches? Why not have the long continuous seats such as those in use at Marine Park and around Jamaica Pond? Being permanently located, there is less wear and tear on them than on the common benches. Yours for more seats or benches.

RUD. D. MAIER.

WANTS MALDEN DRY, BUT HIS HOPES ARE FAINT

"I want to see Malden a dry city, if only for a week, but it never will be as long as Samuel Emerton is Chief of Police," said Alderman John M. Devir when the board heard the report of the License Committee.

After two years of no-license the aldermen decided last evening to grant twenty licenses to druggists to sell liquor for mechanical and medicinal purposes only.

The only applications rejected were those of Charles B. Mason and Luther W. Hough.

MUNICIPAL COURT NOTES.

"If Judge Emmons could fix it up with the court authorities so that we could identify drunk prisoners by proxy," remarked a young patrolman, "the life of a night officer might be worth while. But when you've been up all night, it's no cinch to wait till noon for the sake of saying 'That's the man, your honor.'"

Officer Smith of the State Board of Charities is a sort of temporary father of the fatherless. Almost any morning he can be seen towing a string of little tots to the court house. An uninitiated young woman in the Pemberton building was heard to remark "what a remarkably large family that gentleman has. I wonder how he can be so placid with so many to bother him?"

The question, "Where was the defendant standing?" in a case to-day elicited the following answers: "He was on the cribstone," "He was on the cobstun," "He was on the cur stone," "He was on the crobblestone."

Clerk Ingalls was somewhat surprised when a prisoner walked up to his desk while a case was on trial and demanded a receipt for the money he had paid the Commonwealth in fines.

BOSTON GIRLS' FAME DUE TO MISS HOWE

SHE IS PROUD OF THE SUCCESS OF HER MUSICAL PROTEGES IN EUROPE.

SHE DISCOVERED BOSTON GENIUS.

Miss Emma S. Howe advised three Boston young women to study music in Europe and they have all found phenomenal success in grand opera in Naples.

The discovery that the three Boston girls who have made great successes in grand opera in the Bellini Theatre, Naples, this year, possessed phenomenal voices was made by Miss Emma S. Howe, of this city, on whose advice they went abroad.

"I think my pride in the discovery of the value of these three young women's voices is justifiable," says Miss Howe.

The successful singers are Miss Elvira Leveroni, who has won fame in "Mignon," Miss Sherlie B. Wheeler, of the Back Bay, who achieved success in "La Favorita," and Miss Ella Kirmes, of Melrose, whose singing of Leonore in "Il Trovatore," won her a season's engagement. Miss Howe took upon herself the training of the three girls, and taught them for three years.

Two years ago she sent Miss Wheeler to Naples, to study under Signor Sebastiani, a celebrated vocal teacher, and a year ago she herself took Miss Leveroni and Miss Kirmes to the same teacher. The results have fully justified her expectations.

MANY GUESTS ATTEND CARLISLE MAY PARTY

The May party and dance by the Carlisle Athletic Club, in Jubilee Hall, Warren street, brought a big attendance. Some of the guests were:

Miss Marion Dunn, Miss Alice Clifford, Miss Katherine Clifford, Miss Nellie Fogarty, Miss Jessie Fogarty, Miss Elizabeth Reddish, Miss Katherine Scollane, Miss Marjorie Callahan, Miss Josephine Scollane, Miss Sadie Estale, Miss Sadie Campbell, Miss May Burke, Miss Belle Shanon, Miss Helen Clifford, Miss Fannie Sullivan, Miss Marion Sullivan, Miss Mary Goode, Miss Angela Goode, Miss Mary McDermott, Frank G. Ewing, Thomas Mahoney, Frederick Cronin, John Fogarty, Harry Fogarty, Randolph Thorne, Arthur Fogarty, Randolph Thorne, Edward McDermott, Joseph F. Curley, Frederick Powers, Stanley A. Packard, John V. Peard, Benjamin Cronin, Jr., Guy Small, William Murray and John A. Farren.

SCULPTORS' "TRUST" TO BE BROKEN

Kitson and Others, of Boston, to Join Partridge in New Society.

AT LEAST 25 MEMBERS

Henry H. Kitson and other Boston sculptors are interested with William Ordway Partridge in the formation of a new society to be called the Society of American Sculptors.

Differences which have been the cause of internal strife in the National Sculpture Society for the last six months resulted in the secession of the dissatisfied element, who announce that they will organize a society of their own. Gutzon Borglum, of New York, said that a member of the council had used language in addressing him to which he could not submit, and he has tendered his resignation.

Mr. Partridge announces that his resignation will follow and that he holds proxies and consents enough to insure the formation of a society with a membership of at least twenty-five working sculptors.

Mr. Partridge declared that the present society was run too much on the idea of a trust.

"Assurances have been received from representative sculptors such as Henry H. Kitson, of Boston, that they will be with us in the new society," said Mr. Partridge.

CITY HALL GOSSIP.

Chief Clerk James A. McKibben of the Mayor's office "looped the loop" the other day, when he least expected to. It was raining hard and when he boarded the L train at the Dudley street terminal his thoughts were equally divided between his discomfort and his work, leaving no room for conditions of time or place. When he woke up he found that he was being rushed along Atlantic avenue, far from Park street. At first his impulse was to get off the train and go back; then he reasoned that he would not gain much time that way, and with the even mind for which he is noted curbed his impatience and made the circuit, ultimately bringing up at Park street. But he was quite a little late at the office.

Chairman Salem D. Charles of the street department will merely exist during the coming hot weather; for him there is no fun until the light snow again flies and the scent of the foxes can be followed. The foxes, however, are content with present conditions. They know the deadly accuracy of the chairman's aim.

It is a joyous smile that City Auditor James H. Dodge is wearing these days. His face shows the happiness that he feels in being reappointed and confirmed, in spite of the hard fight made against him by certain persons.

Alderman Curley made a great hit with the sewer laborers Monday afternoon, when he offered the order placing them upon a permanent basis. A large number of the employes of the division were on hand to see the order go through and they showed unmistakably their appreciation of Mr. Curley's efforts.

IN FEDERAL BUILDING.

Colonel John M. Fiske, deputy collector of customs, is in New Haven among relatives. A week's respite from duties—the time he expects to be away—is not a very long training time to prepare for the summer heat, but it's all he will take.

Frederick W. Hintz, formerly special treasury agent stationed here, made a social call on Assistant Appraiser Blaney yesterday. Incidentally he assisted Blaney in straightening out some details relative to a complicated invoice.

Back from a few days' fishing trip in Maine, Assistant Postmaster Mansfield wears a coat of sunburn which causes considerable amusement among his associates. He says the fishing's good, but the sun is hot.

Postmaster Hibbard considered himself the head of Boston postal affairs, until his six-year-old son, Beaumont, took possession of the office for a day and disabused his mind of the error.

Deputy United States Marshal Waters, who has been away from his desk for a week on account of a bad foot, will, with the assistance of crutches, be at his post tomorrow.

CHAMPION JEFF PREPARED TO GO LIMIT WITH MUNROE

SAN FRANCISCO, May 11.—Champion Jim Jeffries is jogging along smoothly in his preparations for his battle with Jack Munroe, which takes place in San Francisco on June 17. The champion has been taking off weight gradually at his training quarters at Harbin Springs, which has been the favorite training camp for the big Californian in all of his important battles. Jeffries is being taken good care of this time.

His wife has taken charge of the camp and the big fellow has the best cooking, which is supervised over by Mrs. Jeffries. The manner in which the champion is following schedule would not indicate that he is the least bit worried over his coming encounter. In fact, there is an air of confidence about the big fellow when he speaks of the battle. He would give the impression that the result is a foregone conclusion, and it is only a question as to how many rounds Munroe will last.

Prepared to Go Limit.

Jeffries is placing no limit on the battle. He will be prepared to go the limit if necessary, but it will be the knockout that he will be after just as soon as the gong sounds. In speaking of the bout and its possible outcome Jeffries said that he did not believe that there was a chance for the contest to go the limit. If Munroe wanted to make a long fight of it and stay the limit, the Champion said, he would go after him and force the fighting, as he did in his recent contest with Jim Corbett.

Heretofore Jeffries has permitted his opponents to cut out the pace. He would wait for them to come to him and cop them with his terrific left. In his bout with Corbett, Jeffries never let up on the former champion. He cut loose and whenever Corbett was anxious to play for wind by side-stepping, Jeffries would be after him with the wallop. His wonderful speed was a revelation to Corbett, and the latter was beaten long before the limit.

How He Will Win Fight.

Jeffries has planned the method for his bout with Munroe and the miner boxer will find a much more lively man before him than when he fought Sharkey, or, in fact, when he encountered Jeffries in his first bout in Butte, Mont., which lasted four rounds.

"I never try to beat any man in any particular round," said Jeffries. "It is a foolish matter to undertake. When I enter the ring I am more or less cautious for the first round at least. I simply feel my opponent out. I do not do this because I fear a wallop, but to find out his weak points and the easiest manner to defeat him. The idea is to get quick results without wasting your strength. When I have my man sized up I go after him. I pay little attention to the blows that he is going to send in. Of course, I stop most of them, but those that get by do very little damage. In the first place I can stand a pretty good wallop without losing my balance, and that counts a great deal.

"The reason that you can't figure putting a man out in any particular round before the battle is because you can't tell what kind of condition he is in. If he is out of condition I could beat almost any man in the first round by giving him a good wallop in the stomach. That is where a blow tells when you're not trained to take the gaff. After the first round it is easy to punish an opponent with a single wallop. I find it more effective to wear a fellow down gradually, and when he is weak and exhausted just give him a wallop not hard with sufficient force to keep him down ten seconds.

"There is no fun in beating or cutting a man up badly. I believe in being humane even in a boxing exhibition, and I believe it is due to that reason that I have never injured any of my opponents, notwithstanding the fact that I might have done injury had I put all the force at my command in a single blow."

S. BOSTON HIGH WILL RETRIEVE

Although South Boston High went down to defeat before the strong team of Melrose High School, Captain Keyes is confident that he will take his next game. They have played an eleven-inning game with Boston College and after a hard battle was defeated by one run, the score being 7 to 6. Among the players showing up the best are John Barrett Torsney and Butler.

HOME FANS TO ROOT HARD SURE

WAKEFIELD, May 11.—Anxiously the live fans here are awaiting the game between Wakefield and Attleboro on the home grounds next Saturday. It is expected that the contest will be one of the snappiest of the season, as both are fairly evenly matched.

MICHIGAN BOYS WON'T COMPETE

Harvard and Yale may rest easy now that the University of Michigan has announced that it will not send a track team to compete at the Intercollegiate meet.

Michigan made a grand showing at the Penn relay races, and little Hahn defeated Schick and Torrey in the dashes, while Kellogg had his own way in the distance runs. Shule on the hurdles and Rose in the shot won their events from the pick of the colleges. Ineligibility of these men is the reason for not coming East.

News of Sports of All Kinds Briefly Told

HARVARD VS. DARTMOUTH

There should be an interesting ball game on Soldier's Field to-day, when Harvard and Dartmouth line up. It is probable that Kernan will play second base for the Crimson, a position that has been weak all the season. Stephenson will catch and Coburn will pitch. The line-up will be: Harvard—Carr, 3b.; Kernan, 2b.; Stephenson, c.; Clarkson, c. f.; Matthews, s. s.; Randall, 1b.; Greenough, r. f.; Fischel, l. f.; Coburn, p. Dartmouth—Witham, c. f.; O'Brien, l. f.; Glaze, p.; Hobbs, 3b.; Keady, 1b.; Main, r. f.; Orcutt, 2b.; Reeves, s. s.; McCabe, c.

INGRAHAM IS POPULAR.

Cyclists are much pleased at the announcement that James Ingraham will have charge of the Charles River Park this season. As he is an old hand at the game they have perfect confidence in him, and know they will get square treatment. Ingraham is busy signing riders and arranging night and holiday races.

WORCESTER MAN WINS.

BUFFALO, N. Y., May 11.—In a mixed wrestling match Charley Rogers, of Worcester, Mass., defeated Jim Parr, of England. Rogers was Parr's superior in the Graeco-Roman style, winning the first and third falls in 16 minutes 30 seconds and 14 minutes 10 seconds. Parr won the second fall, catch-as-catch-can, in 22 minutes 15 seconds.

TIGERS IN SHAKE UP.

PRINCETON, May 11.—As a result of the poor work of the nine against Washington and Jefferson there has been a big shake-up in the Tigers team. Princeton's lineup is now as follows: Stevens or Underhill, pitcher; Cooney, catcher; Cosgrave, first base; Wells, second; Purnell, short; Reid, third; Stevens or Underhill, left field; Forsythe, centre field; Davis, right field.

MIRAGE II. IS SPEEDY.

It will take a very fast boat to defeat the Mirage II., the eighteen-foot knockabout, owned by L. H. Boardman. In a race off the Corinthian Club house she defeated the Privateer, Guyamel and a new boat designed by Crowninshield.

HARVARD SENIORS WIN.

Harvard's seniors carried off the palm at the class athletic games, beating the juniors ten points. The sophomores were third. Le Moyne made a good showing in the shot put.

HICKEY LEAVES SPIDERS.

CLEVELAND, May 10.—Pitcher "Jack" Hickey has been sold by the American League team of this city to the Columbus American Association.

YACHT VISITOR LAUNCHED.

In Lawley's yard in South Boston the yacht Visitor was launched. She was designed by Swazee, Raymond & Page for W. Harry Brown, of Pittsburg. The Visitor is ninety-eight feet over all, ninety-three feet on the waterline, fourteen feet beam and four feet three inches draught. She is the highest powered boat of her length in the world, and if she makes her contract speed, twenty knots for an hour's continuous running and nineteen knots for two hours' continuous steam, she will be the fastest boat of her length afloat.

HARVARD'S GOLF TOURNEY.

Of the thirty-four players who started in the Harvard golf tourney at the Country Club's links eight qualified as follows: Fay Ingalls, 80; Pierre Proal, 80; H. C. Egan, 82; H. Davenport, 82; A. L. White, 85; H. B. Hollins, Jr., 85; F. H. Ellis, 85; W. C. Chick, 85. The pairings for the first round of match play to-day is as follows:

Ingalls and Chick, Davenport and Hollins; Proal and Ellis; Egan and White.

QUINCY Y. C. HOUSE.

At a cost of $1,500 work has been started on the Quincy Yacht Club house. The building will be entirely remodelled. There will be an observation piazza, new lockers and a pool room.

NEW YORKERS THINK M'COY WILL WIN

By Boston American Leased Wire.

NEW YORK, May 11.—Not since O'Brien fought six rounds with Tommy Ryan have the local sports been so worked up over a pugilistic event as they are over the O'Brien-McCoy encounter, which takes place at Philadelphia Saturday night.

According to a well-known sporting man, there is likely to be heavy betting on the contest. As there will be no decision the bets will have to be on a knockout or opinion of the press.

The local sports favor McCoy's chances, and they are willing to wager any amount on the Hoosier boxer. George Considine is one of those who believe that McCoy will carry off the honors, and he is willing to wager $1,000 that if there is a knockout McCoy will be the one that will land it.

McCoy is working hard at his gymnasium at White Plains. On weighing in he found that he was well down to his weight, and in the future will cut out his heavy road work. His ten-mile jogs over the road daily have helped his wind to such an extent that he believes that he will be able to go the entire distance at a terrific pace. He will continue the gymnasium work until Friday.

BASEBALL DEAL OFF.

Before leaving the city Clark Griffith, manager of the Highlanders, said he had called off the deal with the Washington Club, by which Beville and Anderson were to be exchanged for Selbach and Kittredge. He said he first agreed to it as an accommodation for the Washington Club, and as Senators' officials asked for delay he decided not to make the change.

KNOCKED THE REFEREE OUT OF RING

Special to Boston American.

WESTFIELD, May 11.—There was one fight at the Berkshire A. C. that wasn't on the card. The feature bout was between George McFadden, of New York, and John L. Sullivan, Jr., of Boston. It was a rough and tumble affair from the start. They mixed it up lively in the first round and the referee had his hands full.

In the second round the boys fell after a clinch, and John L. Jr., getting up first gave McFadden a wallop while the latter was down. The referee promptly stopped the bout and gave McFadden the decision.

Then came the unbilled part of the show. As soon as Sullivan heard the referee's verdict he gave the official a punch that sent him through the ropes down on the spectators. There was great excitement, but no more damage was done.

FAST BIKERS TRAINING.

Some fast miles were reeled off by Stinson, Leander and McLean at the Revere track while training for their twenty-mile race Saturday night. All three men are in fine shape and a good race is expected.

GANS TO MEET FITZGERALD IN JERSEY

By Boston American Leased Wire.

NEW YORK, May 11.—Boxing shows will be inaugurated on next Wednesday night at Union Hill, N. J., when the Weehawken Athletic Club will offer a programme of four bouts. The announcement is made that the club will hold weekly shows the same as are held in other cities. Tim Hurst, the well known referee, has been made matchmaker of the new club, as well as referee. He will officiate at all of the bouts.

For the star bout on next Wednesday Joe Gans, the lightweight champion, will meet Willie Fitzgerald, the clever Brooklyn boxer. Fitzgerald and Gans have clashed before, and each time they have made things hum. For a starter the bouts to be decided under the auspices of the Weehawken A. C. will be limited to six rounds. MEN! DON'T DESPAIR

KEEP UP YOUR COURAGE. Come to me and be cured of the disease which is making your life unlivable.

MEN, I have cured cases of malignant blood poisoning when the parts most affected had begun actually to drop off, and when the odor accompanying the decay had been so bad that the patient was ashamed to enter a street car.

There are men in Boston who had made up their minds that death was the only refuge left them, on account of the hideous nature of their disease, but who at last came to me and were cured; and who, since that time, have been married and have become the fathers of as handsome and as healthy boys and girls as you could wish to see.

DON'T THINK YOUR CASE IS HOPELESS. I can cure when other specialists do not dare to attempt treatment. Don't give up! Come to me to-day. Remember that I have been treating the diseases peculiar to men for 50 years, and I guarantee to cure every case that I accept for a cure. COME TO-DAY. Hours 9 A. M. to 9 P. M. Sundays included.

TROTTING MEN FORM NEW LEAGUE

NEW YORK, May 11.—The Grand Circuit of Trotting Race Tracks was organized as a corporation at a meeting in the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel of representatives of twelve of the most important tracks in the country. The object of the organization, according to Secretary Albert H. Moore, will be "the purification of the turf and the uplifting of racing to the highest possible plane."

It will not interfere with its parent bodies—the National and American Trotting Associations—but will act in harmony with them.

The twelve tracks incorporated in the Grand Circuit will be these: Detroit, Cleveland, Buffalo, Empire City and Brighton Beach (New York), Readville, Boston, Providence, Hartford, Columbus (Ohio), Cincinnati and Memphis.

The articles of incorporation were signed by Daniel J. Campau, of Detroit; James Butler, of New York; C. K. G. Billings, of Memphis; John E. Thayer, of Boston; F. E. Perkins, of Providence, and P. M. Hanna of Cleveland. The six named were chosen as stewards of the Grand Circuit, and the following officers were named:

At Cincinnati—Cincinnati 9, Brooklyn 7.

They will be at the American League Park this afternoon, and play will be called at the usual hour, and not at 4 o'clock, as previously announced.

It was Ladies' Day, and this feature will be the goods each Tuesday and Friday. Fair fans and rank outsiders who never saw a game before took in the fine show.

More than fifty New York rooters in the stand made the battle lively when the jockey lads went ahead to stay. It was only a score of 2 to 1. Somebody tipped the chirpy boys who bet that Beanville was good at that price. But the final shot of Thoney made them sad. You couldn't hear a peep among the loyal lads when the tussle went wrong. Can you blame them. With Gibson in, who lost for the first time, things looked rosy for the Hub. But our hit column was sparse of bingles as a boneless codfish. Somehow, the boys couldn't hand Powell a good wallop in any one round. John Anderson, of the old Worcester A. C., Dave Fultz, another New Englander, and Thoney, a new recruit of New York, put the bumps to us for fair. They slugged good and plenty when hits meant runs, and there you are. All the rest of the Gotham players, except Keeler and Ganzel, might as well drop their sticks at the plate, Gibson was so effective.

Without knocking big Jack Powell, who pitched a great team to victory, those who took in the game said Gibson certainly was the real samps in the box for Boston. His speed was all to the good for so small a chap. Rooters wondered in which pocket he kept the goods, his steamy ones came so fast. Again, one of the perkiest curves in the whole calendar of benders was Gibson's at command. He had the New York lads breaking their backs to connect in every round. No fault of Gibson's boys, that the topnotchers didn't land the goods.

But the champs say they will go against the Tigers to see how fast they can go to pieces, that's the story now.

With the Detroit bunch will be some hot old favorites. Crawford and Barrett are real live Bay State goods, so of course they'll have friends among the sunny gents over in the bleachers. Again, Bobby Lowe, one of the best tossers who ever wore a Hub uniform, will be seen at his old job, second base. And they say Robert Lincoln Lowe is just as fast as ever.

In O'Leary the Tigers, it is rumored, have picked up a phenom at short field. Nothing comes too hot on either side, if Western critics have called the turn, for this new wonder in the big ring.

Though not a bunch of sluggers, the Tigers are the goods at snappy field work, and they have a good box corps.

Once a slam-bang tosser, who was liable to knock anybody's block off with a wild, fast wallop, that sporty chap, "Wild Bill" Donovan, is king box man of the visitors.

Donovan may be the slabman to-day, and he may not. It all depends in Detroit on the manager. He has Killian, Kitson, Mullin and Stovall. Like a Jap commander, Stallings doesn't believe much in shoving pitchers in in order.

"I pick 'em as I like them," says he.

"Every slab artist goes out before a game and I give the cue to the one I think is the best to find the pan and bring home the goods."

So we are likely to have any of them judging now.

If it should be Kitson, old fans who saw that high rolling Oriole bunch of Ned Hanlon's will recall the nifty box work of Frank when he was in the advance guard of the hit-and-run champions.

Between the Innings at American League Park

In the third Ferris made a lightning play of Ganzel's attempt to reach second, when Thoney hit safe over the second bag. Hobe yanked the sphere out of the tall grass, stabbed the sack with the toe of his shoe and had Ganzel before he could reach the base on a contortion play.

* * *

Wee Willy Keeler did some great placing when he clipped a double over the first cushion in the fifth round. One bleacher fan, who now and then plays the races, sung out: "_reat Willy, you go like Irish Lad in a handicap."

* * *

There was a noticeable sprinkling of straw hats throughout the large attendance. A brisk wind, however, cropped out, and it kept the wearers of the straw lids "really embarrassed."

* * *

Dougherty's short bunt along the third-base line in the sixth was one of the prettiest ever seen on the Huntington Avenue Grounds. But Jim McGuire's whip w[illegible] working and the big sprinter was cut [illegible] irst by an eyelash.

* * *

[illegible] sen made a strong bid for third on [illegible] as's long fly to centre. He reached [illegible] ase all right, but overran it. Thoney [illegible] al him, but the diamond autocrat [illegible] l not allow the play.

* * *

* * *

* * *

When the Bostons were executing their double play in the seventh, a New York rooter in the grandstand yelled: "Hard luck, they'll make it, I'll bet a hat." He won his headgear, but no Red fan took him.

* * *

Thoney played fast and loose by spurts at third. He did not fit well in the place it looked. But his timely triple was the goods for fair. After that Thoney was all the goods, not "Phoney."

* * *

Powell kept his head level in the seventh. There were three Hubs on base. The fans were expecting Dougherty to make good, but he fanned somehow.

* * *

Collins made a beautiful stop of Stahl's fine throw from centre to catch Elberfeld.

* * *

Enthusiasm was kindled in the seventh and eighth. Before that time there was little live rooting by the fans.

* * *

It looked like easy scoring in the eighth for New York, when Anderson flied to Freeman. There were men on second and third. Freeman got the ball after a hard run and threw to Farrell. They got Elberfeld easily, and Buck got the warm hand for his grand throwing.

* * *

There were a couple of Gothamites in the stand that cheered to beat the band every time Jack Powell struck out a Boston batter.

* * *

McGuire got hit in the leg in the ninth by a foul from Parent. He limped for a minute like a lame horse, but came back for more in a minute. "Can't kill the old war horse," remarked Jim, as he stod by the guns again.

Timely Diamond Pick-Ups.

Geier, the new Boston National fielder, is not only a good fielder, but is swatting the sphere to tune of .300.

* * *

Weimer, says the New York Telegram, is the first player to receive suspension this year. What about Jake Beckley?

* * *

* * *

Huggins, Cincinnati's new wonder, has not made an error in his last eleven games.

* * *

Jim Mutrie, the old-timer, who had charge of the Giants when Buck Ewing, Ward, Mickey Welch and Roger Connor made up the fast bunch, has broken into the game again as manager of a local team on Long Island.

* * *

* * *

Beckley was given a reception when he came to the bat in St. Louis. His forced absence has made him all the more popula .

* * *

Phillippi was again on the losing end for Smoketown the other day. What's the matter with Barney's bunch anyway?

* * *

* * *

Comiskey says that he will not allow Isbell or Donahoe to go to Washington.

* * *

* * *

Boston and Brooklyn are tied in the National League for first place in the National in fielding. Both have .955.

* * *

Boston Nationals hit Button Briggs for twelve safe ones the other day.

* * *

Kelly of Cincinnati is hitting some. He secured a triple and a double off Hanlon's star twirler Sunday.

* * *

Big Jack Cronin, the former Brooklyn player, and Shorty Dobbs played against their former team mates in Cincinnati. Both are putting up a good article of baseball.

* * *

HOME LETTERS.

By Beatrice Fairfax.

WHEN all the world is young, lad,
And all the trees are green,
And every goose a swan, lad,
And every lass a queen,
Then hey for boot and horse, lad,
And 'round the world away,
Young blood must have its course, lad,
And every dog his day.

And all the trees are brown,
And all the sport is stale, lad,
And all the wheels run down,
Creep home and take your place there,
The spent and maimed among,
God grant you find one face there
You loved when all was young.
—Charles Kingsley.

THIS city is full of young women and men who are daily growing further away from their homes. They have come from a distance, perhaps, and it is not possible to make more than a rare visit back to the home nest, and so after the first few months of homesickness have passed they find themselves caught up in the mad whirl of this hive of humanity, and before they realize it they have drifted far away from home and home influences.

When they do think about home it is only to wonder how they ever stood the quiet village life, and to shiver at the thought of ever going back to it.

At first they write long letters home, telling all they do and how homesick they are, and how no place will ever be as sweet as the pokey little village they were so anxious to get away from.

After a while they write more rarely, and gradually stop entirely, arguing that the people at home do not know people and places here, and so are not interested, and that, anyway, they will know that "no news is good news," and, satisfied with all these excuses, they proceed to forget all about the home which, until the fascination of city life laid hold upon them, filled their idea of all that was perfect.

And in the meantime, how about the ones they have left behind in the quiet little home—the ones whose portion in life it is to "only stand and wait"?

To them the greatest excitement in life lies in the coming of the letters of the fortunate member of the family who has been able to get out in the world and "do" something.

The letters are their one little glimpse of an existence that can never be theirs, the link that binds their quiet lives with the great, busy world.

They are read and re-read, their arrival is an event, their non-arrival a keen disappointment.

To the old mother or father for whom the sands of life have almost run, every word from the absent son or daughter is precious.

Every triumph, every woe, is sympathized with by that mother who from the hour she bears them until life is ended lives for her children.

And those children are selfishly neglecting her, not even taking the trouble to write her a weekly letter. Some day with bitter, unavailing tears they will know how she waited and longed for those letters.

There are sure to be days when, with aching heart and tired brain, they would give everything on earth to creep into that humble home and those loving arms—days when for just one hour of the heavenly peace of those bygone days they would give weeks of the present unrest.

Letter writing may be a task, but it is a task that pays in the long run. It means that you keep in touch with all the old associations and friends. Even should you be away from home for years, if you have kept your place by the fireside through the medium of letters you will always find a warm nest to creep into, no matter how bruised and battered your contact with the great outside world has left you.

Advice to the Lovelorn

BY BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a young man twenty-four and engaged to a young lady of same age, and owing to her own confession, she admits being deeply in love at the age of seventeen with another fellow, but owing to the objection of her parents gave him up after three years' courting. Now, she has often told me she likes me, but she says when we are married and if I am good she will perhaps love me. Do you think I can risk it, as I love her dearly? BENIBOY.

SHE is only trying to tease you, I think, and you should not fret over her having been engaged three years ago. I think you are quite safe in marrying her.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am engaged to a young gentleman. He has been more attentive to my chum than to me, as he gave her flowers and candy and never gave me anything except an engagement ring. What shall I do? I love him dearly and hate to give him up. Please advise me in this matter soon, as I expect to marry him in two weeks.

HEARTBROKEN.

DON'T you think an engagement ring is worth more than flowers and candy? If you object to it, of course, he should not do it, but I think you are foolish to be jealous, especially as you are to be married so soon. He is only nice to her for your sake, I imagine.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a young man, twenty-one years of age, earning eight dollars a week, and with bright prospects for the future. My father promised me when I married, provided he approved of the girl, to give me the use of a house and $5,000 besides. I have been keeping company with a young lady for several years and love her dearly, and apparently my father approved of her. Her father has just died and left her alone in the world, and I promptly asked her to marry me, and we are to marry next month. When I told my father of the marriage, for some unknown reason he said the young lady would not make me a good wife, and says if I marry her he will not give me the promised wedding present. Now, I am not earning enough to support her, and she is willing to work, but is frail and not able, and she has no one to support her. So what am I to do? J. F. H.

YOU cannot force your father to give you the house and money if he is not willing to. It does not seem fair that he should change his mind. Have you told him how much you care for her and that she has no means of support? It may be that he thinks you too young to marry. I cannot advise you to marry before you are able to support a wife. If your father will not consent you will have to wait until you are making a larger salary, and in the meantime the girl might find some light employment.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a young girl of twenty-one, and am going with a young man about the same age. There has been a misunderstanding between us and he doesn't call any more. I love him dearly and want to win him back again. Please advise me how. M. C. S.

Cambridge.

IF you are at fault in the matter, go to him and tell him so. If not, do nothing, and if he loves you he will not stand the separation long.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

A short time ago I met a young man who was very nice to me. He accompanied me home from a dance and asked if he could write. I told him he could. He asked me in one of his letters if I would go out with him and meet him on the corner. As I am seventeen years old, my mother doesn't object to my having young men come to take me out, but I know she wouldn't want me to meet any on the corners. She has told me men don't respect a girl that meets them on corners. In answer to his letter I said I would have to ask my mother and I would let him know. That I did and told him I couldn't go unless he called at our house for me. I have been told I did very wrong in saying I would have to ask my mother, but I feel, although I didn't receive an answer, that I did perfectly right. It may be he likes girls of inferior ways.

R.

YOU are perfectly right, and it is a pleasure to hear of a girl who is so sensible. I agree with your mother. If the man wants you to go out with him he should call for you at your own house.

How to Be Old and Attractive.

YOU are always as young as you feel; people never grow old until they think themselves old. According to Balzac "a woman of thirty is most fascinating and dangerous." The fashionable age for a society woman is without doubt between thirty and forty. Never either admit your age or give landmarks which will enable others to guess it rightly. Take plenty of exercise, move briskly, speak firmly. Take a half hour's rest in the middle of the day; nothing conduces more to a good appearance. It renews strength and freshens the complexion. The want of occupation does not conduce to youth or to rest; "a mind quite vacant is a mind distressed." Energy keeps the muscles elastic, and romance is an amulet against wrinkles. Defy time by keeping your heart young. It is envy, loss of heart, and impatience that bring lines to the face.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

Am going with a young man about a year, whom I am compelled to meet outside my home. He says he loves me, and never cares to be with any one except me. But when we go out together, which is quite often, he never sees me to the door, but leaves me at the car. Do you think he is sincere? I think if he cares for me, as he says, he should see me home.

DISCOURAGED.

THE man is certainly not very gallant. He should always see you to the door. You make a great mistake in meeting a man outside the environment of your own home. It lowers a girl's dignity and makes him think she is deceiving her parents.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a young man eighteen years old, studying law, and my time is taken up very much in studying in the evening. I am also keeping company with a young lady, whom I think the world of, and know she loves me. Now, what I want to know is which would you do; give up the position or the girl, as I love both very dearly, and I don't know what to do. W. E. D.

STICK to your studies. You are too young to think seriously of love for a while yet, and this is the time to prepare yourself for your life's work. You might see the girl once a week, I should think, without hurting your studies.

New and Fashionable Colors.

THE newest tints are geranium pink, Neapolitan violet and the popular champagne shade, which look so pretty trimmed with lace, and, in addition, there are some rose pinks, pale turquoise blue, while a fresh shade of mauve will be specially appreciated by blonde beauties, and a silver-gray is suitable for slight mourning. The fashionable brown, now called mordore, is also represented, and there are two good shades of royal blue and a rich poppy red. The white silks are suitable for children's frocks, as they are rather more substantial than Japanese washing silks, though just as easy to tuck and quite as soft, and any of the pale tints will make smart and serviceable slips for all occasions.

A Cradle Song.

By Percy H. Trotman.

SOFTLY the breeze steals through the leaves,
And whispers a fond good-night;
The swallows fly home to their nesting eaves,
To sleep till the day dawns bright.
Each little bluebell droops its head,
While a whispered good-night from the roses red
Is wafted to baby and me.
So sleep softly, sleep, till morning light!
Good-night, baby mine! good-night!

Kissing the flowers as they go to rest;
While each little babybird nestles its head
And falls asleep in each downy bed.
Gently I rock her cradle deep,
While mother's darling is fast asleep,
And the nightingale trills high up in the tree
A good-night song to baby and me.
For angels are watching till morning light—

Fancy Combs for the Hair

THE attention a girl must pay to her head if she would be well groomed has stimulated the makers of combs to renewed effort and some wonderful things are at hand for her who has the money to buy.

Tortoise shell is, of course, first choice, but the "composition" combs are really very pretty and serviceable. A quantity of combs are a downright necessity if one would arrange the hair in the latest style. Handsome black combs are a part of the modish head equipment and one particularly pretty thing is of shell decorated with filigree mounting of Etruscan gold studded with tiny brilliants.

Across the top of another desirable comb was a broad band of rose gold set with a horizontal band of brilliants. Baroque pearls are used with good effect in some of these combs and a gray comb is ornamented with a peacock feather of dull gray silver, the eye of the feather being set with a brilliant stone.

A comb of white celluloid is studded with tiny turquoise or with tourmalines or garnets or emeralds. Coral combs are a reigning fancy, the tiny round pink coral being set on combs of tortoise shell.

Wear New Veils for the Complexion.

APROPOS of the complexion problem, which seems, judging from the craze for "treatments," to be one of the most absorbing cares of the modern woman, many difficulties arise from the too frequent habit of wearing soiled veils against the face, so that it is well for those who wear veils to see that they are constantly renewed, for in town the amount of soot and smoke which is absorbed by such materials is enormous and certainly threatens to complicate the question of how to preserve a good complexion.

Modern Unrest.

THE women of this generation are undoubtedly suffering from too much occupation. The listless, bored, discontented, unsettled girl of twenty years ago has given place to the restless, energetic and positively desperate business woman thirsting for fresh outlets for enterprise. We are caught up in the whirlwind of modern unrest, and we imagine we are happy because we have no time to think anything to the contrary.

Who Is the Prettiest Girl in Boston?

THE BOSTON AMERICAN has been asked by numerous correspondents to name the prettiest girl in Boston. The question is herewith passed along to the readers of the AMERICAN for them to decide. A half hours' walk on any of the leading streets of our city, in the Common, the Public Garden, the Parks, Commonwealth avenue, and in the adjacent, suburbs, discloses the fact that there are more pretty young women and girls to be found than in any other city in the United States.

They are well built, muscular, clear-skinned and more wholesome looking than the women of New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Chicago or Denver. They dress with better taste, and in a word, possess all the elements that make up physically attractive womanhood. So that the readers of the BOSTON AMERICAN may form themselves into a great jury to decide the question, we request that photographs, properly authenticated, be sent to the BEAUTY EDITOR, BOSTON AMERICAN Office, 80 and 82 Summer Street.

This request not only includes photographs of society women, but women and girls who work in shops and stores, and, in fact, in every vocation in life. Send in the photographs and the BOSTON AMERICAN will print them all as rapidly as possible. Photographs will be returned to the readers if desired

"THE WORST WOMAN IN BOSTON."

"THEY have fallen in with some low circus people, poor as themselves, if appearances count for aught. It's a curious world. When trouble comes you have no idea how that kind of people stand by each other."

Frances's lip curled.

"I can see them in their wretched hovel. It is not an attractive picture. I would rather be in my grave than live such a life. So you have failed to find out where Philip Armstrong is hiding?"

"I have, my dear."

"And the money I gave you to give to Mrs. Felton?"

Vincent Lyle glanced at her with an imperturbable smile.

"I'm sorry to say that you will never see that again. A couple of my outstanding accounts swallowed that up, and it didn't half suffice. I must have some more."

"You can't have it."

"But I must. It's easy for you. You've only got to ask old Milford, and he'll give you any amount you want."

"You are mistaken." Frances wrung her hands in desperation. "It is all over. Yes, it is, and it is all your work and that of that accursed old father of mine. If you had stayed away as I told you to do and given me a chance, all would have been well. Instead you called here every day and took from me all the money I had. Old miser that he is, it was as pleasant and as safe to ask him for money as to put a match to a keg of gunpowder. My continued requests for money made him suspicious. He went straight to Detective Curzon, who has gone over my past with a very fine rake. I'm done, I tell you. The old man has cornered me."

"But you are still his wife."

"That makes no difference. An allowance of ten dollars a week or so will rid him of me as long as he lives."

Vincent Lyle glanced about the darkness-enwrapped garden. He moved close to James Milford's wife and bent his lips to her ear. With all these precautions he took the yet further one of whispering.

"But why should he live?" Frances Vere looked at him in strained inquiry.

"He may die at any moment. In his present state of mind, half-crazed about his alienation from his daughter and his difference with you, what more likely than that he should take it into his head to commit suicide?"

Vincent Lyle carelessly drew his revolver from his light top coat. The moonlight fell upon the shining silver barrel. Frances impatiently pushed it aside, yet the man, who knew her so well, watching her with a half smile, thought he was witnessing the slow birth of a purpose in her troubled mind. When she spoke at last it was with constraint, and her eyes avoided his.

"He's not likely to do that. The situation is hopeless. It is quite useless to talk. You must go now and to-morrow I will let you know what occurs."

Vincent Lyle, smiling, restored the pistol to his pocket.

"As you wish. You know that I am your servant in all things, provided, of course, that I receive my wage."

A man's laugh sounded through the night air. It seemed to come from beneath their feet. Frances grasped her companion's arm with trembling fingers.

Vincent Lyle walked to the hedge, and, leaning far over, swept the length of it with anxious eyes. He came back, reassurance in his leisurely gait.

"There is not a soul about. It was your fancy, my dear."

"Perhaps I was mistaken. I am not myself to-night. Good-by. You may hear from me to-morrow."

A quick handclasp and Frances Milford's tall figure flitted among the trees and disappeared within the great brass doors. The man looked after her with a strange smile.

CHAPTER XXIX.

You Shall Answer for Your Sin.

JAMES MILFORD'S face, the more aged, a shade more wretched, because of the rich, barbaric colors of his Persian dressing gown, stood before the fireplace watching a bulky paper curl into the last graying wraith of what had been his last will and testament. He stooped over it painfully to assure himself that not one typewritten syllable remained on a telltale scrap of paper. Satisfied at last, he extinguished the lights and crept into bed. In a few moments deep, sighing breaths proved that he had sunk into the deep slumber of exhaustion.

A sound, light as the breathing of a child asleep, might have been heard at the door that opened into Frances Milford's apartment. Slowly, little by little, the door opened. A tall figure in white bent its head to listen to the deep, regular respirations of the sleeper. Frances Milford entered and placed a shaded candle on a hassock at the foot of the bed. There was still the gleam of silver in her steady hand as she gazed at the still face of the sleeper. Tremendous the power of malevolent thought. It seemed to pierce the consciousness of the prone figure, for it stirred slightly, and in a distant dreamlike voice asked:

"Who is there?"

A tiny flash in the dark, a bullet that sped its sure way home, a groan, and James Milford was silenced forever.

Frances darted to the divan where her husband had carelessly tossed the clothes he had worn that evening. She smiled evilly as she drew a bunch of keys from a pocket. Casting a triumphant backward glance at the silent form on the bed, she crept quietly to the large roll-top desk. As she turned the key in the lock the cool night air rushed in upon her in a swift current. Turning to learn the cause, she faced the gaunt figure and glowing face of Philip Armstrong. The open window at the right showed the manner of his entrance.

"Let me go, I say," the woman screamed, the low, tense tones of a death-like terror. "Let me go! Let me go!"

"So at last I have found you!"

"Let me go!" It was the mere ghost of a voice that came from her bloodless lips.

"Let you go," he laughed, "when I've waited years for this chance." Again he laughed, and the woman shivered as though with ague at the malignant sound.

"Let me go, I say! Who are you?" came in quivering tones.

Again the low laugh, like an echo of the laughter of fiends in hell.

"You have not forgotten me. It is useless to pretend. Once I was thrilled by your acting, but that time is past. You know why I am here. You know why, after searching for eight years, I have hunted you down." He leaned so near that his hot breath stirred the loose hair upon her forehead. "Say your prayers, for I have come to kill you."

"You are mad!" she cried.

"Mad, yes, mad." He seized her shoulders. "And who has made me mad?"

Frances Milford sank upon her knees.

"Mercy!" She seized his tense right arm imploringly. "Philip, don't kill me. Remember how you loved me once. It shall be the same again. Spare me. I cannot go. I fear to die. I am not ready."

"Ha! ha! ha! You cry for mercy to me, whom you showed no mercy; me whom you made an Ishmael. What music your cries are to my ears! Cry again. Cry, I tell you, as I will choke you at once. You shall answer for your sins, but I would hear you cry first. Cry! Cry!"

"Help!" The night was rent by her screams. "Help! Help! Then the talon-like fingers closed upon her throat.

A sound upon the piazza caused him to turn his head for a moment. Unconsciously he relaxed his grasp. In an instant the woman had sprung away from him. As he pursued her, and she cowed behind the bed, a burly figure in blue clambered in at the window. Another followed him. Following the direction of Frances Milford's trembling finger they seized Philip Armstrong, who struggled with the strength of a madman.

"Do not let him go," she gasped. "See! He killed my husband and tried to murder me."

Dexter was not a cowardly youth, or one to hesitate. Burglars were in that room, and they had done violence to his uncle. They might at that moment be completing their work, and although he had no weapon he flung himself violently against the door in an effort to force the lock.

But his strength was as nothing against the heavy oak. Seizing a hall chair that stood near him, he climbed by its aid to the transom, shattered the glass with a sharp blow of his fist, and landed head first within the library, to the accompaniment of a terrific clatter of falling fragments of the broken pane.

For a moment he stood and sought to penetrate the darkness, but the room was like a pall. Then, hearing no sound, he advanced slowly across the chamber, with an outstretched hand to intercept any danger that might be in his path, and gradually made his way to the button that controlled the electric light. It clicked in his hand, but there was no responsive illumination. Some one had disconnected the current.

But the gas chandelier still remained. Drawing a match from his pocket, he lighted it on his shoe and held it to the jet nearest him. It flickered for a second as he turned the cock, and then, caught by a puff of wind that had come through the broken transom, went out. The gas, too, had failed. Here were thieves who had made careful arrangements for their crime.

Dexter shuddered in spite of himself. What manner of criminals were these who had entered into a conspiracy with Darkness itself to cover up their deeds? Were they still lurking in the room, and if they were, what chance had he against them?

But then the thought of that scream came back, and banishing his half-formed fear, he drew his last remaining match from his pocket and shading it from the draught with his hand, lighted the edge of an envelope which he had taken from his pocket.

Gradually the little flame ran along the edge of the paper and then ate its way into the centre of the envelope, waxing until it shed a glow over the massive old furniture with which the room was half filled. Holding it above his head, Dexter peered cautiously about him, and seized the back of a chair which stood within his reach, to use in case the illumination might mark him as the object of a sudden attack.

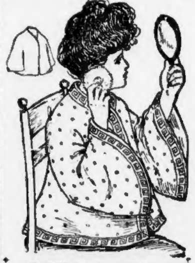
HEARST'S BOSTON AMERICAN PATTERN

Ladies' Circular One-Piece Dressing Sack.

Fashion's vagaries and the ups and downs of its fancy are as marked in dressing sacks as in the frocks themselves. There is always a close following of the season's modes, and in the circular dressing sack or negligee shown here, with the body and sleeve made in one piece, surely the acme of perfection has been reached in the long shoulder line.

Every woman needs a few simple little room sacks to slip on at odd moments, and yet for just this purpose it does not always seem wise to make a large expenditure. Many of the models are so elaborate that unless one can cover up the foundation with trimming the effect is lost. Not so with this one—for while it may be elaborated with ruffles of lace around the neck, front, sleeves, and even the lower edge, it is just as pretty as can be if made as illustrated—with only a finishing band. This—in wash material—might be of contrasting color.

The model is one which the average woman likes to experiment upon in the selection of colors and trimming, knowing full well that it is capable of several variations, any one of which will be pretty and effective. The pattern is in one piece, having bias seam down the back. This seam, together with a very short one under the arm, which may be sewn or tied with ribbon, completes a most unique little garment, and at a cost of two yards of material. The style is suitable for flannelette, cashmere, silk, pongee or any of the light weight woolens or wash materials.



HEARST'S BOSTON AMERICAN will mail a pattern of the above on receipt of 10 cents, to cover all cost of handling, etc.

All orders should be directed to HEARST'S BOSTON AMERICAN PATTERN DEPT., P. O. Box 230, Boston, Mass.

THE CHAPERON ON SOCIETY

Col. Livermore Heartily Greeted by Friends on His Return From Egyptian Trip.

By the Chaperon.

HEART whole and apparently fancy free, Colonel Thomas L. Livermore has returned from his season in Egypt and is having a cordial welcome from his friends and intimates at the clubs. Better than all the rest, Mrs. Bulkeley Wells, the colonel's only daughter, had come East from Colorado, where she spent the past six months, and was on hand to greet her father.

The colonel made his first appearance in public at the Footlight Club performance, "The Importance of Being in Earnest," whither he went with Mrs. Wells, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Robeson and some people with whom he had been dining. There was quite an ovation in his honor, everyone being anxious to extend a welcoming hand.

And by the way, the Footlight Club has a new addition to its forces in Miss Sarah Schraff, a daughter of General Schraff, U. S. A., retired, who has recently taken a house in Jamaica Plain and has been cordially welcomed into the recesses of that suburb's most fashionable circle. Miss Schraff is pretty, accomplished and blessed with a pronounced talent for amateur theatricals. It is certainly hoped that she may be included in the casts of some of the future plays given by the Footlight.

Mr. Arthur F. Nazro also made his theatrical debut on this occasion in a minor role. Mr. Nazro was graduated from Harvard last June and is very popular in his set. He is a son of Commander Nazro, U. S. N., who is at present stationed off the Chinese coast, while Mrs. and Miss Nazro have gone out to Shanghai in order to be with him as much as possible.

A tiny visitor is expected soon in the pretty home in Milton of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Putnam Chase, whose marriage took place last Summer and was followed by an extended tour abroad. Great are the rejoicings in consequence, and great the delight in the home of Mr. and Mrs. George Wigglesworth (Mrs. Chase's parents) and in the house of the elder Chases.

Mrs. Chase was Anna Wigglesworth, a handsome and rather aristocratic looking girl, and is a niece of Mrs. Henry Grew and cousin of Mrs. J. Pierpont Morgan, Jr. The family is one of the oldest and most aristocratic in this vicinity. The Wigglesworths are going early in June to their Summer residence at Manchester-by-the-Sea, where Mr. and Mrs. Chase will join them later on.

Just what gives a man authority to add "Harvard" to his name is a technicality which it would be interesting to have explained. Certainly the fact of having been graduated from the college gives a man the right to annex that proud title, but men who only stay in Harvard until the semi-annuals or for a year or two are just as tenacious of the word and the honor.

The matter was brought up in discussion recently at a dinner given by some of the people who had attended the marriage of Miss Jane Kay and Mr. Henry R. Burgess. Mr. Burgess was [illegible] in the various accounts of the wedding as a "Harvard '0[illegible]" man, whereas he really left college two years in advance of his graduation year. Mr. Burgess, however, was in good standing, it is understood, when he said farewell to Harvard, but went to work owing to his love for his fiancee, so that he might be in a better position to take care of her. Perhaps these facts might combine in giving him the title to "Harvard" which he so evidently coveted.

The wedding was lovely, the bride pretty and the champagne served at the breakfast [illegible] quantities, of a brand which to many was more than satisfied. Some of the young men appeared downtown late that afternoon with burdens hopelessly out of proportion to their narrow shoulders.

LAST APPEARANCE OF JULIAN ELTINGE IN JORDAN HALL

JORDAN HALL witnessed the last amateur appearance of Julian Dalton Eltinge, for he leaves America at once for a period of study abroad and when he returns he will take up a professional career on the stage. Assisted by the Harvard Glee Club and two Boston soloists, the affair last night was a brilliant one and the concert was largely attended by society people.

Assisting Mr. Eltinge were Mrs. Andros Hawley, soprano, and Miss Gordon Walker, reader and harpist. The glee club made a welcome addition to the programme.

Maritz Hauptmann Emery and Frank H. Grey were the accompanists. "Johnny Harvard" and the "Champagne Song" given by the glee club were well appreciated and so were the other numbers that this well trained chorus rendered.

Mrs. Hawley sang very effectively "The Rose Morn" and Henschel's "Spring Song." Her well modulated voice was in especially fine condition last night.

Miss Walker received hearty commendation for her clever monologue work, but it was her harp solo that took the audience and she was recalled three times. It is seldom that she has played with such exquisite effect as she exhibited last night.

It goes without saying that the greatest interest centered in Mr. Eltinge. His voice has greatly improved since his last visit to Boston and has that deep resonant quality that can only be acquired by persistent cultivation. In his imitations, Mr. Eltinge was very clever.

The list of ushers contains the names of well known Harvard men. They were Orville G. Frantz, assisted by Carl D. Marshall, Raymond Overson, Andrew Marshall, Walter Clarkson, Louis Grilk, Chester H. Robinson, W. J. Clothier, Ernest E. Smith, Carrol J. Swan, Beals Wright and A. Edward Ellis.

The subscribers were: Mrs. Roger Wolcott, Mrs. W. H. Hill, Mrs. R. [illegible] Mrs. [illegible] Ware, Mrs. [illegible] Mrs. H. [illegible] Foster, Mrs. W. [illegible] Mrs. [illegible] Mrs. J. F. Representative Nick Longworth and his mother are planning to spend the Summer at Beverley Farms. Their place is being fixed up for the season, and Mrs. Longworth promises that she will entertain on quite a lavish scale for her this Summer. She is to have as guests the Count and Countess Adelbert de Chambrun.

That Reggie Vanderbilt and his wife are at the Hollis Hunnewells at Wellesley means that Boston will probably see a good deal of the "Reggies" this season. They are planning to stay for quite a while as Mr. Vanderbilt is interested in horses, horses[illegible] colts and plans to make a canvass for desirable animals to add to his stables.

* * *

Dr. and Mrs. A. Laurence Mason, who have been in New York the guests of Mr. and Mrs. F. Rollins Morse, are to return to Boston the last of the week. They promise to remain home for a long time, but will spend the Summer at Villa Rosa, at Newport, the home of Mr. and Mrs. Morse.

Boston society will much regret the departure of Baron Kaneko and his suite, who have been at the Somerset for the past two months. The Baron has been the recipient of numerous attentions since he has been here, and has made a warm place in the hearts of his entertainers. He was responsible for a number of nice little affairs at the Somerset, too, that will not be forgotten.

Alfred Ames of Somerset, who has been visiting Chester C. Rhodes in New York, has returned. He will spend his Summer at his country place on the North Shore.

GOLD BRICK TO LABOR IS HOUSE COMMITTEE

—FRANK K. FOSTER

EVASIVE POLICY OF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY TOWARD WORKINGMEN SHOWN UP.

BY FRANK K. FOSTER,
Chairman Legislative Committee Massachusetts Federation.

Of all the legislative gold bricks handed out to the long-suffering workingmen of Massachusetts, the special committee appointed by Speaker Frothingham to consider the report of the Commission on the Relations of Employers and Employes is easily entitled to the biggest bunch of trading stamps.

In 1903 Representative Newton of Everett, House chairman of the Joint Judiciary Committee, informed the trade union representatives that on account of that committee having so many bills before it it could not give the time to properly investigate the various labor propositions submitted to it for consideration. He suggested, therefore, that if the labor people were content he would introduce a resolve providing for the creation of a special commission which should sit in recess upon the bills pertaining to the relation of employers and employes, and report its findings to the next Legislature.

INCREASED COST OF LIVING.

While a trifle suspicious that this suggestion was a case of the Greeks bearing gifts, the trade unionists gave their assent, and the commission was appointed with a quite satisfactory make-up from the labor standpoint. The commission thrashed over the same old straw that had many times been thrashed before and presented its report to the present Legislature. This report was a fairly good, although rather neutral, summing up of the arguments, pro and con, upon labor issues. With the exception of a recommendation as to the Workmen's Compensation Act, scarcely any constructive legislation was recommended by it.

Speaker Frothingham now appears upon the scene, and instead of referring the major portion of the report to the Labor Committee (a committee friendly to labor) appoints a special committee to consider the commission's report. This special committee was made up almost entirely of men positively antagonistic to progressive labor legislation. It goes through the farce—for no organized labor has considered it since the first hearing—of again considering in detail the issues involved in the report of the commission. As a result of the painful and laborious travail of this mountain, the mouse has emerged in the shape of a recommendation that yet [illegible]

The logical and legitimate development of this comedy will be that the Legislature of 1905 will appoint a special committee to consider the report of the recess committee which considered the report of the special committee, which considered the report of the commission, which considered the matters before the Judiciary Committee, and so on indefinitely, quite like the theme of the nursery rhyme which chronicled the adventures of the finally acrobatic cow. Great are the methods of Republican circumlocution in the Massachusetts Legislature.

Mr. Carnegie's Fund for Heroes.

It Will Not Increase the Number of Heroes, [illegible] Are Not Cash Propositions, [illegible]

Mr. Carnegie, scattering among human beings the interest on the hundreds of millions which he collected during his active commercial days, now gives five millions of dollars to be devoted to rewarding heroes.

Wise editors and others who never gave away anything, are criticising Carnegie industriously and ingeniously. It seems to us that their criticism would be better devoted to Carnegie's extortion through the tariff, to his hiring Pinkertons to shoot the workmen that built up his fortune, to his share in the formation of the Steel Trust WHICH HAS STOLEN HUNDREDS OF MILLIONS OF DOLLARS FROM INNOCENT INVESTORS OF SMALL MEANS—it would be better to criticise such features of Carnegie's past life than to criticise his present enthusiasm for giving.

In man's egotistical desire for the admiration of his fellows Nature seems to have found an antidote even for modern plutocracy. Through Carnegie the antidote is working vigorously, let us be glad that it exists.

Mr. Carnegie's five millions of dollars will not increase by one the number of the world's heroes. Mr. Carnegie knows that as well as anybody else. The man about to rush from a sinking ship or a burning theatre will not suddenly remember Mr. Carnegie's fund, turn around and begin to save lives heroically, for cash.

But the Carnegie hero fund will do something quite as important as to manufacture new heroes.

Mr. Carnegie's fund, wisely expended, will atone for the general public indifference toward the relatives, especially the mothers and the young children of those who sacrifice their lives for others.

We owe the brave men of the world to the MOTHERS of these brave men, to the character given to the men before they were born, to the training given to them afterward.

If Mr. Carnegie's newly-invented "Hero Fund" shall prevent now and then the mother of some brave man from dying in poverty, Mr. Carnegie will have done something of which he may be proud, and which the ordinary little editor might refrain from criticising.

The Oriental Fakir and His Disciples

In order to become a "master" in the particular variety of occultism of which Ottoman Carr Adusht Hanish is the apostle a Chicago woman fasted forty days, and is now in an insane asylum.

"Soul is everything," she heard the mystic say, and with the enthusiasm peculiar to followers of the strange fakirs who come out of the East she sought to live up to the creed by "subjugating" the body.

It is a curious thing that whenever a swarthy person, with a fez or turban, appears as a preacher of some new or old system of religion or philosophy he has no difficulty in gathering about him disciples.

American cities are full of people who will accept from Hindoo or Persian articles of faith which if delivered by one of their own countrymen they would unhesitatingly recognize as maudlin absurdities.

It never seems to occur to these strivers in mysticism that the preachers of sublimated moonshine are without standing or distinction among the people who know them best. The tendency to ascribe supernatural powers, transcendental knowledge or familiarity with the unknowable to peoples with whom we are not familiar is only a manifestation of ignorance. There are professors in our colleges whose information as to Oriental systems and beliefs transcends that of the most occult of these wandering seers as far as it transcends that of a voo-doo man in an African village—and the man of learning ranks the African and the Oriental mystic about the same.

A temple in Teheran is no more mysterious than a city skyscraper, and an itinerant vender of mysteries is no more likely to be the possessor of passports to the higher life because he hails from Persia or India than from New Hampshire.

The Beloved Woman.

BY HELEN HALE.

What is the cherished aim, the dearest hope, the sweetest desire of all womanly hearts? Is it to be beautiful, with sparkling eyes, glowing cheeks and radiant hair? Is it to be brilliant, with a ready wit that is the admiration and envy of every one? Ah, no indeed! It is to be loved, is it not? The satisfaction of personal beauty, the pride of achievement are empty glories compared to the joy of being loved. What, after all, is the magic secret of winning the great gift of love? Bend your head while I whisper it to you softly: BE UNSELFISH. This is the golden key which will open all hearts whose affection it is worth while desiring.

There is nothing more repulsive than a selfish woman—a woman who selfishly considers her own inclinations, her own comfort, her own pleasures. If you have the slightest desire to be loved, if you would have your presence a welcome one everywhere; if you would be admired, respected, adored; you must learn to live for others.

It may be that unintentionally you have forgotten the gentle art of considering the happiness of others and it seems difficult to accustom your mind to the idea of thinking of self last.

Just as some now play a piece on the piano, without the music or thought of the notes being struck, although they picked them out with slow, patient toil, so can you with fixed purpose and continual practice learn the law of kindness until it becomes second nature to you, making the song of your life the sweetest music ever written.

Are you waiting for some great occasion, some direct revelation, to show you how to win the love of those around you?

Why, there is always some one to smile at, somebody to give your chair to, somebody to whom a book, a flower or even an old paper will be a delight. Think of all the little children whose hearts could be made glad by a tiny gift, a tender word or sweet smile. "If I value myself on anything," said Hawthorne, "it is having a smile that children love."

It is the small attentions, the trivial observances of thoughtfulness, which will make it possible for you to win the confidence of friends, who will afterward give you greater privileges of helping them.

"But," you say, "it is not easy or convenient to be thinking of the comfort and happiness of others all the time."

Was it easy for Florence Nightingale in the pleasant seclusion of her home to decide to go to far away Crimea and care for the wounded and dying? But her reward was the adoration of thousands of soldiers who even kissed her shadow as it passed their beds. Do you think it was not difficult for the lowly peasant girl Jeanne d'Arc to leave her peaceful fields for a strange, turbulent city, with the message which was to save the country?

The heroines of history whose memory the world ever will sweetly cherish are the unselfish women.

However, you may be so situated that you cannot do any great good in the world. By temperament, by education, or by reason of ill health you may be restricted from carrying out ambitious plans, but there are none so weak, so ignorant or so poor they cannot do some little good to their fellow creatures.

What a change could be made in your family life, in your friendships, in the condition of those around you, if your kindly thoughts blossomed into DEEDS! Then, you would become the "beloved woman" of your dreams.

SAVE THE COURTHOUSE.

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

Why has no one protested against the defacement of the Old Court House? Two miserable little white hutlike structures are being puttied in between the huge columns on either end of the great Greek Court street front. What these little mushrooms are for not one passer-by in ten knows, but apparently they are sprouts of the subway system, which rears one of its hydra-like heads wherever the wagons stop long enough to let the ground open.

At any rate a fine old building, even if it is somber in its look, is being ruined from an architectural standpoint, and no one seems to care. SHOCKED.

WANTS NO PICKPOCKET WIFE.

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

I see a New York Judge has decided that a woman is justified in going through her husband's pockets while he sleeps. Now, I am a married man and I believe that the man should be the one to dispense the money for the household. He earns it and I can't see where the wife has any claim on it unless he has a mind to give it to her. Of course she has a right to be clothed suitably, but I have found that most women are inclined to spend too freely when they get hold of money they don't earn. I know I wouldn't stand for any woman picking my pocket while I'm asleep, after a hard day's work.

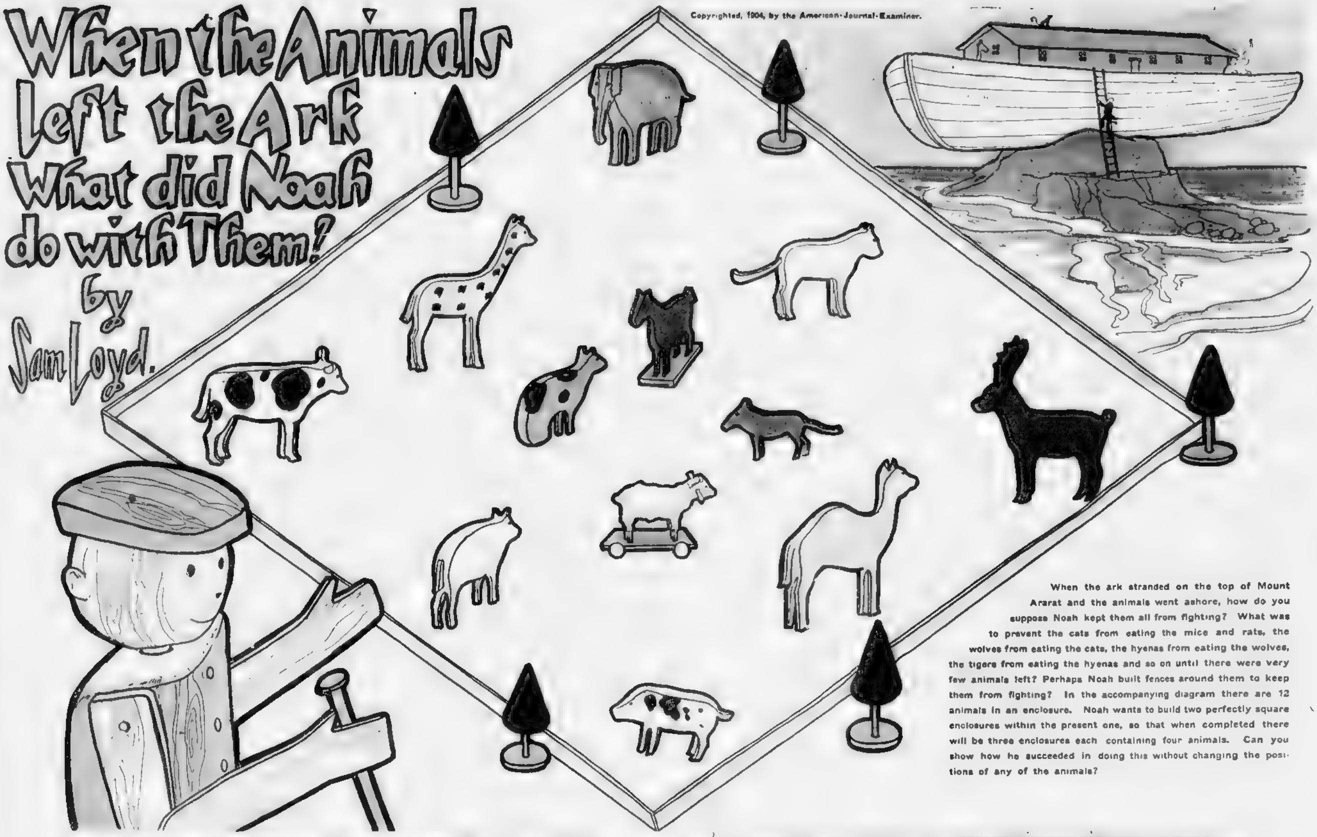
by Sam Loyd.

Copyrighted, 1904, by the American-Journal-Examiner.



When the ark stranded on the top of Mount Ararat and the animals went ashore, how do you suppose Noah kept them all from fighting? What was to prevent the cats from eating the mice and rats, the wolves from eating the cats, the hyenas from eating the wolves, the tigers from eating the hyenas and so on until there were very few animals left? Perhaps Noah built fences around them to keep them from fighting? In the accompanying diagram there are 12 animals in an enclosure. Noah wants to build two perfectly square enclosures within the present one, so that when completed there will be three enclosures each containing four animals. Can you show how he succeeded in doing this without changing the positions of any of the animals?

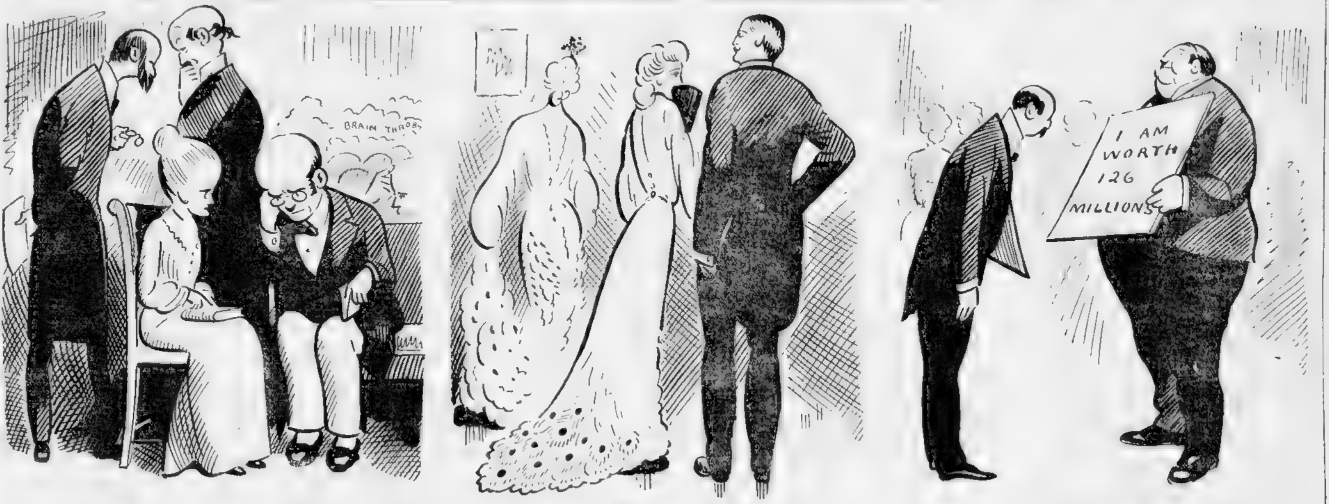
WHAT IS THE BEST SOCIETY?



Is it education? Beauty? Riches?

> "THERE IS NO OTHER SUPERIORITY AMONG MEN THAN A SUPERIORITY IN WISDOM AND VIRTUE"
>
> SAMUEL ADAMS.

It Is Hard to Answer ANY Question, but the Question Above Is One of the Hardest of All

THIS picture is a little different from our regulation Sunday cartoon. It is less solemn, but we do not think it will interest you any the less on that account.

It is an interesting picture and it deals with an interesting question—interesting especially to Americans, who feel so uncertain about themselves, and struggle so earnestly to realize their conception of "superior position."

We have called your attention to the fact that it is very hard to answer ANY question in a really satisfactory way.

In the first place what IS superiority and what IS inferiority?

If you ask, "Does education constitute superiority?"—another question will come back, "What do you mean by education?"

* * *

It is not a waste of time to discuss the question—"What constitutes the superior man?"—for every individual is greatly influenced, and the world is influenced, by the prevailing idea as to the meaning of success. There was a time when all of those who amounted to anything thought that the only independent thing was to rescue Jerusalem from the Heathen. A good many plucky individuals lost their lives following that idea.

At another time the prevailing notion was that the man really worth while spent his time, dressed up in armor, singing under some lady's window, or fighting some other idiot, also dressed up in armor.

The world has gone through phases of literary enthusiasm, artistic enthusiasm, religious enthusiasm.

The only thing to do to-day, if you want to be in the movement of success, is to make money.

* * *

As a matter of fact, it is not likely that the really superior man has ever appeared among us, or that he will appear for a good many centuries.

The man fully developed ought to be devlopd in all directions and we are not big enough or far enough advanced for that yet.

The great scientist is often indifferent to the beauties of literature and art—Darwin confessed that HE was. He had not energy enough to combine scientific investigation with artistic appreciation.

The human being, very good looking is usually rather foolish, inclined to attribute too much importance to external things.

The man or woman very highly educated too often neglects the importance of being attractive and brings education into disrepute by making it repulsive.

* * *

A man may as well resign himself to the fact that at this stage of the world he cannot by any possibility be fully developed and REALLY superior individually.

Birth, family pride, are foolish, of course.

What IS superiority?

Samuel Adams defined it very well in the quotation framed above, but he might have been more explicit and adapted himself more to human limitations.

"Superiority in wisdom and virtue" is real superiority, of course—but what is wisdom, what is virtue, how much must the superior man have of each and how must they be mixed?

* * *

He is really inferior to start with, of course—since the RACE is inferior and in its infancy.

HE is superior, viewed from our low standard—

If he does the very best that he can do

If he is constantly DISSATISFIED with the results which he produces and with himself

If he realizes that his chief duty in the world is to help others, his fellow-human beings stranded with him on this little desert island of the world;

If he works constantly to get an education, but works still more earnestly TO USE WHAT HE KNOWS IN A USEFUL WAY.

If he recognizes the rights of others and makes allowances especially for their defects.

The superior man is he who realizes his INFERIORITY and does what he can to overcome it by an earnest, persistent straining after truth

What is YOUR definition, Mr. Reader, and what are you doing to realize it in yourself?

The Ibis of the Shattered Wing

by Hezekiah Butterworth

Southern Cross uplifts one glowing star
Between the horizon and the Gulf afar;
And gaze across the sea.

A sea, on which an hundred sunsets flow,
Whose tides around an hundred islands glow,
Where lies the sky above in deeps below,—
A shadow falls on me.

Has heaven opened?—do evangels fly,
As in the prophet's heaven, across the sky?
An hundred silver wings now fill my eye,
A cloud of wings, as one!

O Ibis, Ibis! whose thin wings of white
Scarce stir the tones of the sunset light,
When Day dissolving leaves the coasts to Night,
And far seas hide the sun,

Savannas dark where cool the fiery moons,
From still Lake Worth, and mossy-walled lagoons,
Where never footsteps stray;

To bare Antillean, cooled by palm and pine,
From Beryl seas to seas of opaline,
Those level coasts where helpless sea conchs shine,
Thou driftest on thy way!

O Ibis, Ibis! bird of Hermes bold,
The avatar to men from gates of gold,
That blessed all eyes that saw thy wings of old,
My thought, like thee, hath wings.

I follow thee, as cool the shadows fall,
And burn the stars on yon horizon's wall;
And Memphian altars, as my thoughts recall
My soul to thee upsprings!

My heart to-night with Nature's soul is thrilled,
As with the fire that priests of Isis filled
When rose thy wings, and all the world was stilled
Beneath thy lucent plumes!

O Ibis, Ibis! whence thy silent flight?
O'er everglades that only fire-flies light,
Magnolias languid with their blooms, when Night
Gathers from far her glooms.

O'er mossy live-oaks, high palmetto shades,
The cypressed lakelets of the everglades,
O'er rivers dead, and still pines' colonnades,
Where sweet the jessamine grows;

And streams unnumbered low lianas cross,
The sun birds find repose.

But hark! what sound upon the stillness breaks?
A rifle shot—a boatman on the lakes,
An ibis' wing above in silver flakes—
A white bird downward falls!

O Ibis, Ibis! of the tropic skies,
For whom the arches of the sunsets rise,
God made this world to be thy Paradise,
Thy Eden without walls.

O Ibis dead, that on the dark lake floats,
Whose dimming eyes see not the sportsmen's boats,
O'er whose torn wing some brutal instinct gloats,
I wonder if in thee

Live not some spirit,—so the Egyptian thought,—
Some inner life from Life's great Fountain brought,
Something divine from God's great goodness caught,
Some immortality?

Are all these Paradises dead to thee,
The cool savanna and the purple sea,
The air, thy ocean, where thou wanderest free,
I wonder, are they dead?

hast thou yet a spirit life, that flies
Like thine own image through the endless skies,
And art thou to some new born Paradise
By higher instincts led?

Is death, like life, alike to all that live?
Does God to all a double being give?
Do all that breathe eternal life receive?
In thought, where'er it be,

Immortal as the source from whence it came?
O living Ibis, in the sunset's flame,
Still flying westward thou and I, the same,
Can answer not—be HE?

O Diva of the power that all things bless!
The eye of sense may darken, but to give
The larger view; the interconsciousness
Shall live while all it ever knew shall live.

And earth, and sky, and sea, all conscious hopes
The future: life's vivic portals opes
To futures ever brighter than the past.

Drift, drift to sea, O shattered bird, nor thou,
Nor I, nor any consciousness that wakes
Shall know extinction; ever lives the NOW,
The consciousness of all no life forsakes.

But lifts, and lifts the wing by his own law,
That all things mortal are for blessing given;
From every gift we higher treasures draw,

O Ibis, Ibis! of the shattered wing!
The part is but a semblance of the whole,
And "THAT ART THOU" is writ on everything!

O Ibis of the broken wing that drifts,
The essence of thy being lifts and fares;
Beyond the type and all imperfect gifts,
To perfect ambers and embalming airs!

VUN of der [illegible] pluts in dis country for der manufacturing of unhappiness is der upper berth in der [illegible] sleeping car.

[illegible] of dem night before last und der recollection vas like a stone bruise on my memory.

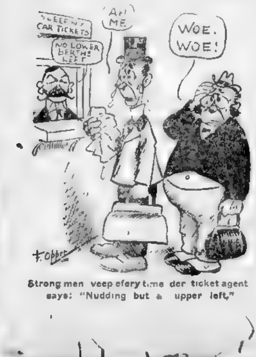
Strong men veep efery time der ticket agent says "Nuddings but a upper left," und luffly vimmen haf der hystererricks und faint ven der colored porter points up it der air und says, "Madam, your eagle's nest is [illegible] far up der mountain side."



Strong men veep efery time der ticket agent says: "Nudding but a upper left."

Der sleeping car I vas on night before last vas crowded from der cellar to der attic und dare vas much internal svearing among dose present.

Vile der porter vas cooking up my attack of insomnia I vent ould in der smoking room to drown my sorrow, but I found so many udder drowners dare ahead of me dot I hat to hold der comb und brush in my lap und sit up on der towel rack vile I took a leedle smoke.

Two chents vas discussioning politics ven I squeezed into der smoker und I chudged dot dey both hat lower berths, udderwise dey vould be busy mit dark und personal [illegible] of der future.

"Ach!" set der chent from Kansas City. "Vot is politics? Vell, vot is it?"

"Politics," set der chent from Providence, "politics is vare ve get it—sometimes in der bank, sometimes in der neck!"

"Ach!" set der chent from Kansas City. "Vot is a politician? Do you know? Eh, vell, vot is a politician?"

"A politician," responded der chent from Providence, "a politician is der reason ve haf so much politics."

"Perhaps," set der chent from Kansas City, "perhaps you know vot is a statesman, yes?"

"A statesman is a politician in great luck," set der chent from Providence, und dis unhooked so much enthusiasm dot der smokeless hog found ould dare vas no buffet car on der train und den offered to buy der drinks.

"Do you belief dot all men vas born equal?" inkvired der chent from Kansas City.

"Alton B. Parker could be yust as idle as Teadore only he prefers svimming," responded der chent from Providence.

"Alton B. Parker has a crowded house on Rosemount Hill, vich is more American because it oferlooks der Hudson," set der chent from Providence.

"Roozlefelt is a great writer," set der chent from Kansas City. "He is der authorshipper of many famous books, und literature is vare he lives."

But yust den der towel rack fell mit a crash und after I picked up der comb und bruch, und der soap und myself I decisioned I vould retire to my bracket on der vall und try to sleep.

"How do I reach my Alpine bungalow?" I set to der colored porter, vareupon he laughed teethfully und hit me on der shins mit a stepladder.

Der chent in der lower berth underneath me vas sleeping as loud as possible und ven I started up der stepladder he began to render Mendelssohn's obligato for der trombone in der key of Chee.

Above der roar of der train avay off from lower No. 2 I could hear an answering bugle call.

I climbed up prepared for der vorst, und in de twinkling of a eyewinker der porter removed der stepladder und dare I vas, sitting on der perilous edge of my pantry shelf mit nuddings to comfort me but der eggshaust of a professional snorer.

Efery time I tried to get my shoes of I bumped my head off und der more I bumped my head off der less I got my shoes off, so I decisioned dot in order to keep my head on I better keep my shoes on also.

Below me all vas dark und gloomy und only py der hoarse groans of der snorers could I tell dot der Pullman Company vas still making money.

But luck vas mit me, for yust den der train struck an inshoot curve vich pushed me to der vall und I bumped my head so completely dot I fell asleep.

Ven I voke up it vas daylighting, so I decisioned to descend from my cubboard shelf at vunce. I peeped ould through der cast-iron curtains, but dare vas no sign of der colored porter, und der stepladder vas unvisable to der naked eye.

Der car vas peaceful now mit der eggsception of a chent in lower 4 dot hat a strangle hold on vun of Beethoven's sonatas und vas beating der cadenza ould of it.

I made a short prayer und conclusioned to fall ouid, but yust den vun of my feets rested on someding solid, so I put both feets on it und began to step down.

But der moment I put my weight on it my stepping stone gave vay und I fall oferboard mit a splash.

"How dare you put your feet on my head?" yelled der man on der ground floor of my bedroom.

"Oxcoos me, it felt like somedlng vooden." I vispered, und den I rushed for der smoker.

Der unsmokeable hog vas still dare using up nine dollars' vorth of seats, so I chumped off der car at der wrong station und came home py trolley.

Conquest

by Ella Wheeler Wilcox

Talk not of strength, until your heart has known
And fought with weakness through long hours alone.

Talk not of virtue, till your conquering soul
Has met temptation and gained full control.

Boast not of garments, all unscorched by sin,
Till you have passed, unscathed, through fires within.

Who, safe in camp, has never faced his foes.

Where Shall a Girl Make a Stage Reputation?

By Alan Dale

Copyright, 1904, by American Journal Examiner.

THE return of Miss Edna May, this time as a prophet in her own country—barriers broken down, and all that sort of thing—has started the merry-merries in an endless chain of letters, all flung around my mail box. They want my advice, free of charge. As I have just returned from England, they feel that I am the one person on earth who can tell them whether it be advisable to stay right here, or to set sail for Europe at once.

It is very perplexing, and I pause, slightly aghast. They want to know which has the better chance, the blonde or the brunette? They are anxious to learn whether society in London takes up any old girl, without asking questions. A few are pathetic. They have been "doing stunts" here for years, and can't get out of the "first row." Their position seems hopeless. Three girls wrote me that they are "supporting aged mothers" (just as though the mothers of stage girls ever are aged'), and two are educating juvenile brothers at extreme cost. One talks of her grandmother, which seems to point to the fact that she is young. Shall they go to England for their "reputations," or shall they stay here?

Now, I'm not a selfish person. If I were, I should unhesitatingly advise all my merry-merry correspondents to sail to-morrow. More than that, I should suggest that they take all their aspiring sisters, cousins and aunts with them. This would clear the atmosphere, as it were. We have been dosed, and are being dosed so relentlessly with the musical show that it would be a great thing for the stage if some of its appurtenances sought other climes. Then we could get the theatre as it used to be, and many people who refrain from the playhouse to-day because they cannot endure the ermine vulgarity of some of our alleged comic operas, would find a favorite pastime restored.

However, I am not going to be selfish, and I am not going to advise a pack of impatient gells to go and prowl about the Strand in London in the absurd belief that London is waiting for them, and is pining to supply each with a reputation, which is very much of a fluke, and the fluke occurs just as frequently—and with far less heartburn—right in this very country.

Miss May, moreover, was not precisely a chorus girl when she went to London. She had been raised from the ranks of the merries before she sailed, and she played her successful role in "The Belle of New York" at the Casino in the metropolis before it caught on in London. We were mildly edified, but not wildly enthusiastic. We could not quite understand London's rhapsodies. We even rather resented them, and when Miss May came back to New York with a sort of "Ha! Ha! I have eaten the canary" expression, we snubbed her, and wouldn't have her.

It was rather cruel and she went back. Those who imagine that she has had a terribly easy time of it, make a great mistake. After "The Belle of New York" nothing happened. She became—that most trying of all characters—a stage beauty. Her wistful prettiness, her nun-like pensiveness—for she was an American Cleo de Merode, without poor Cleo's irresistible stupidity—were her main points. But Miss May was no fool. She worked hard in various productions that she failed to grace. She was tolerated because she was so charming to look at, and she gained time. She has now matured her "art"—while the impression was given out that the "Johnnies" were besieging her, and that Dooks were fighting each other for one of her precious smiles.

All's fair in love and war, and stage. Miss Edna May is now an interesting figure in musical comedy. She has achieved a success in "The School Girl" at Daly's Theatre against great odds—for Americans really, in their heart of hearts, have resented her prior success abroad—and—well, all's well that ends well.

The way of the musical comedy girl abroad is much harder than it is here. To be sure, a few "catch on" rather vociferously. Just at present in London, they are making the reputation of Miss Camille Clifford, a young woman who appears, thoughtfully, in "The Prince of Pilsen." The papers now teem with Miss Camille Clifford. You would imagine that she was the most wonderful creature that had ever set foot in Londontown. Yet just at present she would be quite useless for Boston or New York. Later on, when the glad tidings of her London career have been delicately insinuated here, Miss Camille Clifford will blossom forth as another Edna May, and—well, more trouble.

You see, dear girls, in London you are up against a subtle, intangible proposition that it is hard to cope with. In Boston and New York you go on your merits. If they are salient, the critics bow to you; the public materializes and you achieve a success that means something. In London it is different. The critics write up the stage as though it were the Russo-Japanese war, or fiscal policy, or other sedate but not particularly enlivening topic.

The girl who succeeds in London has succeeded before the newspapers have touched her. Society, or somebody in authority, or some potent big-wig or big-wig-gess has spotted her, and called attention to her claims. She is discussed at private dinner parties. Lady So-and-So calls upon her, leaves a card, and invites her to a function. There she meets all sorts of people who can "do her good," and who proceed to do so.

She is thoroughly "taken up." Her manager hears of it, and being a gentleman who knows the ropes—as well as the weekly illustrated papers—he makes capital of the event. And the dear little gell finds that she is suddenly boosted into popularity, and learns that the servile British public is only too glad to patronize an "artist" whom their betters have approved.

It is all a question of "betters" in England. Here, of course, there are no "betters." One fellow is as good as another and the artist who relies upon appreciation because some particular individual, or set of individuals, has smiled upon her, will get left. It is a hard game, and it isn't worth the candle. It is a game that cannot be regulated, and that is where the trouble comes in. In America, a girl knows where she is. She has no society "racket" to battle with. But in England she not only has to master her art, but she has to make a good impression at evenings. If she has an unhappy habit of eating with her knife, or drinking her soup with a fork, she is lost, lost.

Also, and this shouldn't be forgotten—there are hundreds of very lovely girls in London. They are not as chic and gingery and lively as the American girl, but they are beauties. They have faces like the angels on Christmas cards, and if they have no figures to speak of, and plenty of feet, they are, nevertheless, there in numbers. Some of them never advance. They are not "taken up." They drift from show to show; they pass from the front row to the back row, and nobody gives them a helping hand. Theirs is not a lot to envy.

But let "somebody in authority" just whisper to an amiable sycopant that Miss So-and-So deserves recognition, and—prestissimo—all changes. The dark outlook becomes roseate, and the sun shines. It is rather pitiful. The girl brought up with any vestige of a spirit of independence would resent the hopeless servility of the thing, and writhe at the notion of success under such conditions.

One little volley of applause from, let us say, the King, would be worth more than a column of critical praise. But a column of critical praise can be obtained by a meritorious performance. A smile from the King is to say the least "onsartain." Yet more and more does the loving public rely upon an "indorsement." If the King cannot make a bad play successful—and that he can't do—he can help it along to a degree that the American can scarcely realize.

Just before I came away some amiable compiler made up a list of the shows that the King had patronized during the season of 1904. I thought this so amusing, in the grotesqueness of the idea, that I am going to quote the list because it shows what an eye is kept on the King's theatrical doings, and what a cinch some managers have. Imagine a list of what the President of the United States has seen at the playhouse! Who would care a hang?

The King, however, is looked upon as a good advertisement, and here is a list of what he did from January to August, 1904, not including two operas, which he faced twenty times.

January 29, "The Darling of the Gods," at His Majesty's.

Feb. 11, "The Orchid," at the Gaiety.

February 15, "Joseph Entangled," at the Haymarket.

April 23, "The Cingalee," at Daly's.

June 20, Sarah Bernhardt, at His Majesty's.

August 8, "Veronique," at the Apollo.

August 9, "The Earl and the Girl," at the Adelphi.

Royal support sounds like a relic of the Dark Ages. It exists here, and its ramifications are innumerable. It is at the backbone of success in London—a success that it is impossible to reason about—a success of wire pulling and subtlety. And so I say to the merry-merries that, much as I should like to see them go abroad, I cannot advise them to go.

Miss Edna May created at the Casino a nobody in "The Belle of New York" September 28, 1897. She opened at Daly's in "The School Girl" September 1, 1904, a somebody. It took nearly seven years. One can do it in that time right here.

Destruction of Character Deplorable

By Mrs. John A. Logan

IAGO'S speech:

Good name, in man and woman, dear my lord,
Is the immediate jewel of their souls,
Who steal my purse, steals trash; 'tis something, nothing;
'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands;
But he that filches from me my good name,
Robs me of that which not enriches him,
And makes me poor indeed.

Othello—Act III, Scene 3.

Is constantly recalled by the cruel way in which soulless persons attack the name and fame of defenceless persons.

One may spend a long life in building up a perfect character; may make "virtue his business * * * devotion, his chaplain; chastity, his chamberlain; sobriety, his butler; temperance, his cook; hospitality, his housekeeper; Providence, his steward; charity, his treasurer; piety, his mistress of the house; and discretion, his porter, to let in or out, as most fit," and yet in his passage through the world, he will more than once suffer the "stings and arrows of outrageous fortune."

Let him but once provoke the ire of the dogs of war, farewell to peace. Vicious minds are insatiable; persons dominated by a vindictive spirit know no languor in their desire to destroy the objects of their hate. If the persons who have incurred their displeasure occupy particularly conspicuous positions they seem to imagine they will win laurels by pulling down and humiliating the exalted in the eyes of the world.

MRS. JOHN A. LOGAN.

Men and women vie with each other in the extent to which they carry their persecutions. If there be a difference, commend me rather to the mercy of men than to the inhumanity of some women toward others of their sex.

A womanly woman is one of God's noblest creatures, but an envious and jealous one is more to be dreaded than legions of men in arms.

They pursue their victims in daylight and darkness. They magnify trivialities into mountainous proportions. They resort to anonymous letters. They utilize the venomous and disappointed. Spies and servants are their minions.

They distort facts and imagine vain things, never tiring till they have killed the object of their hate, body and soul. Then they gloat over their evil work. Almost daily the columns of the newspapers are filled with the stories of their exploits.

They pose as the guardians of the public interests. They cry, "Stop thief," at every dispenser of charity and benevolent funds, albeit they have contributed nothing toward that fund or any other.

May the "Father forgive them, they know not what they do."

Our proud boast that we are a Christian people is not verified by the unchristianlike treatment of individuals.

All have not learned the lessons of charity or they would not persecute the defenceless. It would be more in harmony with our professions to obey the commandments to "Let all bitterness and wrath and anger and clamor and evil speaking be put away from you with all malice; and be ye kind one to another, tender hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake has forgiven you." Ephesians iv, 31-32.

The Modern Cinderella

A Feminine Fairy Tale

By Belle Blitz

Copyright, 1904, by American-Journal Examiner.

ONCE upon a time there were three sisters, two of whom were beautiful and dashing young creatures, with straight front figures, peroxide pompadours, and the most lovely hand-made complexions imaginable, while the third was an ordinary looking little thing who would have been perfectly safe anywhere.

The elder sisters were headliners in society and lived a gay and joyous life, hotfooting it about to balls, parties and receptions. They also had the most beautiful dresses, with laces and jewels and long plumes, for their mother was a wise woman who knew that even a chromo looks grand if it is in a sufficiently fine frame.

"When a woman has only a little money," said this astute dame, "it is better for her to spend it for bait than it is to save it up for a rainy day, for if she can only catch a good husband she need not worry about the weather prophecies." So she bought her daughters all the clothes that were fit to wear, and wherever they went they were touted as the real bill of ladings in style and fashion.

Now while the elder sisters were thus tearing things off in the giddy world, the younger sister was sitting away back at home. She was never permitted to go to anything but Sunday school picnics and Simple Affairs, where the only refreshments were weak tea and bread and butter sandwiches, and the only clothes she ever possessed were hand-me-downs that were made out of her sisters' cast off dresses that were cut off at the knees and buttoned up the back to give them a kindergarten look.

This was not because the mother and the elder sisters were unkind, but because it was impossible to have three daughters out in society at the same time, for this would not only have put the family purse on the bum, but would have given a line on the oldest sister's age, so the youngest sister was kept in short dresses and made to wear her hair in pig tails, and was always spoken of by the others as a mere baby, who did not care for anything but her dolls and chocolate creams.

The younger sister was of a sweet and amiable disposition and willing to give her elder sisters a show, and for several years after she was really grown she continued to do the infantile act with great patience, but when at last she perceived that it was going to be her cruel fate to remain perpetually a child, she went to her mother and thus addressed her:

"I do not like the way that you are playing favorites," she said, "and I want to cut out this baby business and have my innings in society. I am dead sore on wearing short dresses with No. 5 feet and ruffled pinafores over a figure framed up to show off a decollette ball gown. I want to cut out the school girl stunt right now, quick, and be grown."

"Alas, my child," cried the mother, "your plight is indeed a sad one, but you can never be grown until at least one of your sisters is married off, for only a millionaire can afford the luxury of having three grown daughters at once. So be a good little girl and go back to the school room, and doubtless Heaven will reward your piety."

Being an obedient daughter, the younger girl did as she was bidden, and for lack of any other employment she amused herself by darning the family stockings. This made her very sorrowful, for it grouches one to mend the holes that other people have danced in their hosiery, and as she plied her needle she wept bitterly as she thought of a certain handsome young millionaire who often took the eldest sister out in his skiddoo wagon.

"I am out of luck," she reflected sadly, "for all that I ever get is to smell the gasoline and wave my hand to them like a stage baby as they depart, for I am supposed to be too young to receive attentions from gentlemen. Yet who knows if there might not be something doing if I got my chance. It is true that I am not so handsome as my sisters, but I have observed that it is not always the good-lookers that win the matrimonial race."

The younger sister sighed, and as she did so she looked up, and to her surprise saw a decrepit old woman standing before her, who accosted her in a trembling voice:

"My dear," said the old woman, "give me food I pray you, for I have travelled far and am faint with hunger."

"Right gladly will I, good mother," returned the younger sister, "although my fare is of the simplest, for I am doomed to live on sterilized baby foods until my elder sisters are married."

After the old woman had satisfied her appetite on malted milk and other innocuous viands suitable to those of tender years, she turned to the girl and said:

"I am not the unfortunate creature that I seem, but your fairy godmother who, seeing that you have a kind and benevolent heart, have come to rescue you from your sad lot. What is your trouble?"

"Woe is me," cried the girl, "for I am slated to remain a child until my sisters are married, and no matter how old I get I can never be grown while they are single."

"Very well, then," replied the fairy godmother, "do as I tell you and you shall soon have your desire. If you must be an infant be an enfant terrible, and they will be glad to have you arrive at years of discretion so as to keep you from giving away the family secrets."

"Ha," cried the girl, "a tip to the talent is sufficient," and with that, after thanking her fairy godmother, she attired herself in an infantile white muslin, with little slippers and sockies, and when her sister returned with the handsome young millionaire she was discovered sitting on a table in the parlor, swinging her feet in a fetching and juvenile manner that was too young for anything. This was the first time that the millionaire had ever noticed her, but she looked so cute that he fell into conversation with her while her sister went to take off her hat.

"I know how old my sister is," lisped the baby thing in an artless way, "she's twenty-five."

"How do you know?" asked the man.

"Because she's been twenty-five for five years," said the innocent little creature.

Just then the good catch her second sister had been trying to land came to the door.

"And I know something else," confided the perfect baby.

"What is it?" asked the other man.

"I am going to be allowed to grow up, and do up my hair when my older sisters get married, and they told me last night that they thought they would bring both of you to the proposing point before long."

"Heavens," cried the elder sisters to each other, in dismay, as they heard these fatal words, "we must really bring her out in society so she will learn what to say."

So the younger sister made her debut the next week, and as she had acquired a permanent veneer of artless innocence from having been a child so many years, she married a wealthy old man, who soon died and left her a rich widow.

SOCIETY

Society Still Clings to Its Summer Homes at the North Shore, but Will Migrate Soon.

If everybody is foolish enough to believe that Boston society is coming back to the city during this beautiful weather they are grandly mistaken. The members of the smart set have very little idea of returning from their Summer homes for awhile yet. To be sure some Back Bay houses have taken on an animated appearance and have seemed to have recovered from their Summer sleep, but by far the majority of them are still beshuttered and begrimed, too, for that matter, and show no signs of returning occupants. A few have come back because of the opening of the schools and a few have come back because they think more of their city homes at this time of the year than their country places, but many have come to the conclusion that this time of the year is the most beautiful at the shore and mountains.

There is no sign in the air of early Fall functions. Weddings have the front row, and several very early Fall ones have transpired. The most important, however, is yet to come, and is that of Miss Edith A. Stackpole to Houston Parker. The date is set for Monday, and the place at Nahant, where there are a number of Boston society people and where a number will be sure to go Monday. It is conceded to be the smartest of the early Fall weddings, and I predict a smart [illegible]. The Union Church at Nahant is to be the scene [illegible]

[illegible] football, and attention is just a trifle early to speak [illegible] games. It is well to look ahead, and a little information on football for our Harvard men is not at all amiss. Captain Hurley has called his men out for September 19, which is earlier than in former years. This seems to augur well for the season, and bespeaks the doughty captain's desire to turn out a good team. Starr, the quarterback from Groton, of whom we have heard a great deal, is coming to Harvard in the Fall, but his eligibility to play is doubted owing to entrance conditions. Nichols, halfback, and Le Moyne, guard, are to be out for their old positions.

The George C. Brooks, who have been abroad all Summer, were last heard from at the Savoy Hotel in London, where they were en route home. They are to stay in London for a short time, and will be back at their home on Bay State road the latter part of this month.

From Paris it is learned that Mrs. F. B. Carpenter, who is abroad with her son and daughter, is expected back soon. She has been having a delightful time, according to her letters, but she says that she will be glad to get back to her Boston home again.

North Shore people are saying a number of good things about the Wallace Goodrichs. They are at Manchester Cove, where they are proving very popular. Mrs. Goodrich has taken up with driving and has acquired a very dainty manner of handling the reins. Mr. Goodrich is well spoken of because of his musical ability. He is to have charge of the musicale at the Eben Jordans', Tuesday.

Miss Alice Richards is back. Miss Richards has been stopping at Magnolia for the season, and has been identified with all the society events at that fashionable North Shore resort. She comes back in excellent health and says that she has had a very pleasant Summer.

Another member of the Boston set who has been abroad all Summer and who is expected back soon is Mrs. John D. Long. The last of this week is set for her return.

Her husband, John D. Long, has been in Buckfield, Maine, but is now at his Summer home at Hingham.

We have seen but little of the William Norths this Summer as they have been abroad travelling in England and the Continent. They promise to be home soon, but will go to the country for a while before coming back to the city.

The Misses Prescott, Etta M. and Annie L. Prescott are back from the White Mountains. They have been at Bethlehem all the season and report a very pleasant Summer.

BOSTON SOCIETY IS MERRY AT FAIR LENOX

LENOX, one of the most fashionable country resorts in the country, has for the next month the centre of the social stage. Plans already made call for a number of very pleasant events that promise to be exceptionally brilliant. A factor that makes the events and functions of double interest to local society is the fact that the Boston smart set is much in evidence and has a hand in all of the goings on at that lively resort.

The Richard C. Dixeys are among the leaders in affairs there, and Tanglewood, their beautiful country home, is almost daily the scene of a society function of some kind. The season has been much enlivened this year by the presence of the members of the British embassy and their wives. They have been well received, have entertained in true British style, and, in short, have done much to make the Summer one of the pleasantest that the place has ever experienced.

It is to Sir Mortimer Durand and Percy C. Wyndham that the success of the recent gymkhana races was due. The races were Sir Mortimer's idea, and he had full charge of them. They were held at Tanglewood. Booths were arranged on the estate, where refreshments were served by dainty debutantes, and Mrs. Dixey kept open house for those in attendance.

When the games were [illegible] and it was found that practically all of the members of the Berkshire Hunt Club were entered in the different events, and, as many of the members of that famous club are Boston people, the races had a double interest to the members of the Boston society set. Among those of social prominence who participated were Guy A. Ward, Samuel Frothingham, Arthur S. Dixey, Joseph W. Burden, Newbold Morris, Miss Kate Cary, Miss Cornelia Barnes, Miss Rosamond Dixey, Miss Josephine Durand, Miss Emily Bacon and Miss Elsie Bacon.

The tournament being over, society has now turned its attention to the Lenox Horse Show, which is an annual feature of the Summer at that place and from present prospects [illegible] 14, at William D. Sloane's Highlawn Farm, and the [illegible] from the stables of John Sloane, Grant Foster, George Westinghouse, Newbold Morris, Robert W. Paterson, Miss Kate Cary, Samuel Frothingham, S. Parkman Shaw, John E. Alexandre, [illegible] Sturgis and William Reed [illegible] all of whom have [illegible] stock and model equipages. It will be seen that the show will be of vital interest to the Boston smart set.

In former years Dr. Henry P. Jacques has [illegible] as secretary, but he is abroad this Summer and Newbold Morris is handling the entries and looking after the preliminary arrangements.

In the evening there is to be a horse show [illegible] at the Aspinwall, and it promises to be the most fashionable event of a semi-public nature ever given at Lenox.

The members of the German Embassy have also been summering at Lenox, and have added greatly to its social success. Prince Hatzfeldt is soon to sail for Germany, and will not return, and Baron von Dem Bussche is to go to Berlin. The Baron will return the first of November, and his wife will remain there in the meantime.

Dinners Attractive To Beverly Society

Special to the Sunday American.

BEVERLY, Sept. 10.—Nearly all the shore residents here had house guests down for over Sunday and the holiday, and there were some few dinners given during the week, but, aside from this, there was little going on to occupy the attention of society.

The Traver Eustises, who, by the way, have been entertaining extensively all the season, gave a large dinner party at their residence at Burgess Point Tuesday evening.

The R. D. Evanses also entertained at a dinner party early in the week. Covers were laid for ten.

William A. Endicott, Jr., who has been in New York recently on a business trip, has returned to his Summer place at the Cove.

Mrs. Dr. J. M. Masury returned early in the week from an extended European tour and is [illegible] at Hospital Point. Mrs. Masury has been away [illegible]. Her father and sister returned with her. Dr. Masury returned the early part of the Summer. The Masurys will be here throughout the Fall, and will spend the Winter in Florida.

Manchester's Pace is Slackening Somewhat

Special to the Sunday American.

MANCHESTER-BY-THE-SEA, Sept. 10—Society on the North Shore is beginning to slacken its pace a little since the opening of September, and there has not been much going on the past week outside the general round of functions, such as dinner parties, luncheons, dinners dances and bridge parties.

The J. Randolph Coolidge, Jrs., of Boston, who have been away from their Smith's Point place for the past two months, will end the season here. The house was opened the early part of the week, the children arriving here then. Mr. and Mrs. Coolidge, who are now at their farm in Walpole, will arrive the latter part of the month.

Mrs. E. J. Holmes (Miss Fitz), of Boston, is with her mother, Mrs. W. Scott Fitz, for the balance of the season, having arrived here a few days ago, after a year spent in travel abroad.

Miss Mary Bigelow, of Boston, is a guest of the Walter L. Mitchells at their Manchester Cove cottage. Miss Lillian Mitchell, of St. Louis, who is spending the Summer at Biddeford Pool, is also a guest of the Mitchells.

Mrs. E. J. Wood, of Boston, had a party of friends at her Cobb avenue cottage to a luncheon Thursday afternoon.

Mrs. W. J. Boardman entertained a party of twelve at dinner last night.

Enjoying September Weather at Magnolia

Special to the Sunday American.

MAGNOLIA, Sept. 10.—The week at Magnolia has been rather quiet, and has been marked principally by a large exodus of the guests at the hotels. However, the hotels will remain open for about two weeks longer, and there are many who are still here for the early Fall.

There were quite a number here who entertained friends over the holiday, among whom were Miss Felton, the eldest daughter of S. N. Felton, who had as her guest the latter part of the week Miss Muriel Gould of Irvington, N. Y.

Mrs. William Horton entertained as her guest Miss M. L. Alexander, of Brookline. Mrs. W. A. Parker, of Brookline was the guest of James H. Beals at the "Overlook," while the H. M. Jacksons entertained Miss E. M. Williams at their cottage, "The Breakers."

Among those who have just come down to enjoy the September weather at the shore are Mrs. J. R. M. Kehan and Mrs. George F. Tower, of St. Louis; Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Schulte and Miss G. H. Blood, of Memphis; Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Perkins, Mr. and Mrs. G. H. Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Anthony, of Providence; Chas. W. Gould, Mrs. N. M. Stanley and S. C. Stanley, of Lawrence.

Loath to Depart From Swampscott

Special to the Sunday American.

SWAMPSCOTT, Sept. 10.—Many Summer sojourners [illegible] the advent of September, but not a few are lingering, loth to depart from the restfulness of the seashore and the cooling breezes of the early Autumn. The roof of the New Ocean House still shelters fully 200 guests, and there are nearly as many still remaining at the Preston and the Lincoln.

The awarding of the tennis tournament prizes has been a matter of much interest this week, the first prize falling to R. C. Seaver, whose championship is as yet un[illegible].

Special to the Sunday American.

BAR HARBOR, Sept. 10.—While the social season at this resort is practically ended the place is by no means deserted. [illegible] finds fully as many cottagers and hotel guests here as in previous years, and while many have left for their city homes their ranks have been recruited by an unusually large number of arrivals for this season of the year.

The dinner dances at the Swimming Club, Kebo Club and Malvern Hotel have been discontinued, and those who remain are resting and enjoying the natural attractions of the place, which receive but slight attention while the social season is at its height. The golf links and tennis courts are well patronized and driving is very much in vogue. All of the regular golf events have closed. The president's cup was won by Francis L. Wellman of New York, and the London cup, for the most points won in the weekly handicap competition [illegible]

SOCIETY FLOCKING TO THE WHITE MOUNTAINS

Special to the Sunday American.

BETHLEHEM, N. H., Sept. 10.—The mountains and the mountain season are in all their glory. Dame Nature is just beginning to tinge the country with her Fall colors, and the spectacular show which she gives every year is about to commence. All the hotels are full, in some cases full to overflowing. Many people who have been at the shore all Summer have sought the mountains for the Fall and this influx is the cause of the overcrowded condition at all the hostelries.

This year has seen more automobile parties passing through the mountains than ever before. [illegible] conveyance is becoming [illegible] and although the roads are not [illegible] as they might be [illegible] through the mountains [illegible] society has taken up [illegible] and not a day passes [illegible] party of [illegible]

By Eleanor Ames.

With Illustrations by Cartoonist Carll, of the Boston Sunday American Staff.

SEVERAL [illegible] pleasantly. I [illegible] the [illegible] in the [illegible] room of the Waldorf-Astoria and heard him order [illegible].

The other day [illegible] pleasantly, I met [illegible] of the [illegible] with him.

When [illegible] wrote "The Earl of Pawtucket" he [illegible] D'Orsay bodily, set [illegible] the centre of the stage and [illegible] interesting people to bear [illegible].

Take [illegible] any act in the play, [illegible] of his monocle and you have Lawrance D'Orsay in everyday life.

He has the same [illegible] to [illegible] aeration, the same charming [illegible] tendency courtesy, the same trick of opening wide his eyes, of [illegible] sideways of laughing, [illegible] that inimitable infectious [illegible] and he says "Oh!" in [illegible] expressive tone.

Something [illegible] ago when Lawrance D'Orsay was last in Boston, I decided, [illegible] on and off the stage that he was either acting all the time, or else he did not really act at all.

The former I discard as unworthy, for Mr. D'Orsay is decidedly genuine and sincere.

On the other hand, he does not like to be told that he is not acting. I mean he does and he doesn't. He realizes the compliment implied to his art, for the greatest art is reached when acting does not appear to be such. Still he does not like to have it believed that it is all fun and no work for him.

Role Built for Him.

"Of course, it's a role built for me," he explains, "and I am simply myself, but it's tremendously hard to be one's self on the stage.

"I have to keep my attention constantly concentrated, and then fancy the years of experience one has to have to be able to play any role well. One can't walk from the drawing room on to the stage and act, you know."

Lord Cardington is ever immaculately dressed, well groomed, fastidious to a degree. If anything, Lawrance D'Orsay is more so.

When Lord Cardington asks Harriet Fordyce to luncheon in the Waldorf Astoria, he wears, if you remember, dark striped trousers, a splendidly built frock coat, a white and black striped waistcoat and a white puff tie—don't you know how deftly Wilkins ties that tie?

When Lawrance D'Orsay asked Eleanor Ames to luncheon at the Touraine he wore a morning suit of gray checks with bright blue threads running through the pattern. His waistcoat was of white with blue stripes [illegible] dark [illegible] a tiny [illegible] was [illegible] gray [illegible] the [illegible] the [illegible] finger [illegible] with [illegible] ring finger of his right hand he wears several narrow grooved bands, making in all a ring [illegible] in width.

"I [illegible] just back from London," he said, turning his head sideways, just as Lord Cardington would. "Don't you think I'm looking fresher than last year? That's because I'm quite rested. I have been up the river and walking and diving out of doors at Sussex. One thing I [illegible] here is my walking. In American cities, you know, one must go quite a distance to get country roads. And what is the use of walking anywhere but in the country."

I murmured something about the beaches and suburbs about Boston.

"Ah, Boston. Yes," he replied, "it has splendid suburbs. I like Boston, it is so quiet and clean. But I dread Chicago." He made the same sort of grimace which Lord Cardington makes when there is talk of his going to the Thirtieth street station. "I think Chicago is a dreadful city, so crowded and noisy. Why, I can't sleep in Chicago. But I have so many good friends there. All over America I have good friends. It is a joy to get back and face American audiences. They are always so friendly. They seem to me to almost reach across the footlights and shake hands with me, and I feel, in playing The Earl as if I were just talking, you know, talking to a lot of my friends.

May Not Play in London.

"And when do you take 'The Earl' over to London and introduce him to your home and your people?" I asked. He looked at his cantaloupe meditatively.

"I'm not so sure that I shall take him to London," he said. "You see, I'm not quite sure that London would appreciate the humor"—of course Mr. D'Orsay says "humah"—"of it. It is so intensely American, you know. Now Pawtucket—they wouldn't know what it was at all. Why, the very title of the play would mean nothing to them. 'The Earl of Pawtucket?' they would say. 'Now who the deuce is the Earl of Pawtucket?' Ha! Ha!'"

I half expected to hear him say, "Great presence of mind, but no delicacy."

"But some of the humor they would be sure to see," I insisted, for it seems to me that the play is so altogether charming that everyone should see it. "Now that joke about the 'trade marks' instead of coat of arms—they couldn't help but appreciate that."

"Couldn't they!" he exclaimed; and in imagination I saw the monocle drop. "They would see it, but they wouldn't laugh. They would think it rather a lot of nerve to talk of an earl having a trade mark. You see, in London if the pit and the gallery don't like a play [illegible] it off, and I'm not at all sure they would like the Earl."

"Did you ever wear a monocle off the stage?" I asked him suddenly. He looked at me quizzically a moment.

"Yes, but I came so near being run over that I gave it up."

"Really run over? How?"

"Well, that's what I say is the reason I don't want to get run over. So I don't wear a monocle. Isn't that a good reason? Of course," and he [illegible] with merriment, "you can believe as much as you like."

"Oh, then, it's a [illegible]."

"Yes," he replied. "Don't you see?" And we laughed together.

"What is the feeling in England about the war between Russia and Japan?" I queried.

"I didn't notice [illegible]."

"How [illegible]"

He looked [illegible]

"Russia [illegible]

"It is [illegible] brought [illegible] a jolly good [illegible] them good."

Then [illegible]

I professed [illegible]

"I hope he who [illegible] Roosevelt [illegible] It was in the [illegible] it to a vote. There were [illegible] twelve [illegible] Washington [illegible] anywhere [illegible] Although [illegible] Arlington [illegible] his private rooms [illegible]

It [illegible] strange to you that we Americans [illegible]

[illegible]

Then Mr. D'Orsay turned his head to one side, opened his eyes, dragged his monocle, [illegible] I beg your pardon [illegible]

"I'd like to tell you a story."

"Well, why don't you?"

"It's about walking," he said deliberately. "You know we were talking about walking.

"When I was heah last wintah I took a long walk along the watah front. I don't know just where I went, but it was somewhere neah Reveah Beach, I think. At any rate, I went [illegible] and then on a [illegible]. There was a narrow sidewalk along the road, but I walked in the middle of the road.

"Now, in America I notice people don't walk in the middle of the road. In England, in the country, they don't walk anywhere else.

"Children Are So Clevah."

"There were some children playing on the sidewalk and when I passed them, they watched for a moment and then said 'The sidewalk ain't good enough for him!' Ha! Ha! Jolly little beggars! They thought I felt too big to walk on the sidewalk. Children are so clevah."

We drifted along talking of children. Mr. D'Orsay thinks English children are [illegible] than American children. He thinks they [illegible] have a lack of [illegible] He also thinks [illegible]

When [illegible] like a lot of [illegible] the little girls [illegible]

[illegible] of walking [illegible] Have you [illegible] motor madness?

[illegible] beastly things," He [illegible] but the [illegible]

I [illegible] you know I [illegible] on the subject of [illegible] Beastly things they are. [illegible] friends [illegible] I always [illegible] excuse for not going, but sometimes I [illegible] And then [illegible] over [illegible] dirt and [illegible] He stated [illegible] what people [illegible] like the [illegible] and towns, and I [illegible] gets very well [illegible] you know, he [illegible]

[illegible] of Mr. D'Orsay's cherished possessions, and one which he has constantly with him, is a superb silver loving cup presented [illegible] by the Mayor of Pawtucket on behalf of the citizens of that city.

It was during the Providence engagement that there was a Pawtucket night. The Mayor [illegible] officials and every one socially prominent was there, and after the several curtain calls, when Lord Cardington, the Earl, stood alone before the footlights bowing again his thanks, Pawtucket's Mayor rose in the box and presented the loving cup to the titled representative who carried Pawtucket's fame all over the country.

Christened the Loving Cup.

"It was tremendous," said D'Orsay. "I hardly knew what to say. But I asked them all back on the stage and we christened the cup. I carry it everywhere."

Before the theatrical season shall have grown very old the Earl will be on his way to the Pacific coast, playing San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, Vancouver and Nome by way of the [illegible] route. After that a New York [illegible] incidental to that the rehearsals of a new play, perhaps.

Mr. [illegible] is now hard at work weaving [illegible] Lawrance D'Orsay.

"But it may not be such a hit as the Earl," says that personage, "and any way I doubt if I could want to give up the Earl. I'm too fond of the old chap. He's a good old sort, I think."

Of present London theatrical successes Mr. D'Orsay is particularly impressed by [illegible] which he says is a delightful fresh and unhackneyed musical piece, and John Drew's new play, "The Duke of Killicrankie," and which Mr. D'Orsay thinks will fit Mr. Drew as well as Pawtucket does himself.

"They always make one so coarse," he [illegible].

"Of course, I know it's all exaggeration, but why not let a chap look like a gentleman in the paper if he is one?"

[illegible] so I led him away from the [illegible] of newspaper art as given the world by a caricaturist.

"How would you like to live in America?" I asked.

He Never Forgets England.

"Oh, I'm sure I don't know," he replied, as if the idea had never occurred to him. "You see, I'm an Englishman, and I never forget England. America is a beautiful country. I like America. But I never thought of living here always."

"Well, if you did, where would you like to live?"

He [illegible]

"In the country," he decided.

"Yes, but where?"

"Oh, I think near San Francisco," he replied.

[illegible] trait in the [illegible] which makes Lord Cardington [illegible]

"I'd rather trust people, you know, as long as I can," he said. "One feels better."

There was a time when I thought Lawrance D'Orsay stood in the path of becoming Americanized. I was mistaken. [illegible]

"The Earl of Pawtucket" and his favorite picture of Lawrance D'Orsay. The photograph of Mr. D'Orsay that "The Earl" is admiring is the one he always gives to his friends.

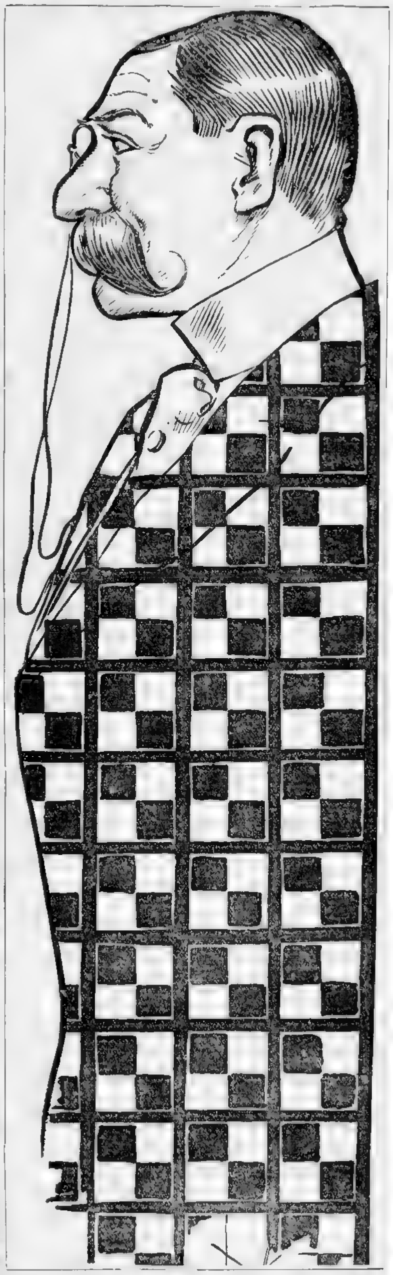
Mr. D'Orsay on his walks always creates a mild sensation.



"The Earl of Pawtucket" wearing his smile, his monocle and his favorite check suit.

The matinee girls adore Lawrance D'Orsay and happy groups of them are filled with fluttering excitement whenever he appears on the street. He bears their admiration with patience.

GRIM FIGHT FOR LIFE AT SEA.

PUMPED AND BAILED SEA WATER IN VAIN

TAKE TO BOATS, STAY AFLOAT ALL NIGHT

Gallantly Rescued by Life Saving Crews, They Tell Tale of Hardship and Suffering.

With a cargo of dynamite underneath them, [illegible] skies above and crashing seas [illegible] momentarily defeating their frantic efforts to keep them back, the crew of the steamship Longfellow, bound from Wilmington, Del., to Lake [illegible] passed a day and evening that will remain in their memory as one of deadly [illegible] living breaths. Inch by inch the water won the fight [illegible] foot the crew retreated before it. The [illegible] had been flooded and the steam pumps were rendered useless. The hand pumps, stiff and rusted by lack of attention, refused to work. Then came a primitive [illegible] with buckets, where sixteen men fought the North Atlantic Ocean—and the ocean won.

When the members of the steamship crew were rescued in the early hours of yesterday by the life saving crews at Highland Light and the Peaked Hill station they told a terrible story of hardship and the [illegible].

There were sixteen and the fate of the Longfellow came upon her as she was [illegible] into the long, green seas, off [illegible] early Friday morning. She had been out from Wilmington two days, and [illegible] her hatches was $18,000 worth of dynamite.

Captain Edward Riley was called and [illegible]. The pumps were [illegible] at work doing what [illegible] to stop the leak, and the vessel [illegible] turned a little to place the end of the [illegible] as closely as [illegible].

Captain Riley hoped to get his vessel into port. He even thought, at that time, that she might be taken to Boston for repairs.

All forenoon they worked. The [illegible] threatened its [illegible].

So the [illegible] passed as had the day [illegible] Portuguese and [illegible] in the rollers of the Atlantic.

Signals of Distress.

Then Captain Riley gave up and burned signals of distress on the upper deck. Passing steamers failed to aid him, he says. And at [illegible] when the boat was so far down [illegible] the two boats were lowered [illegible] so hard to save [illegible]. Before they were fairly away from the [illegible] as she went down, the Longfellow sank.

JAMES J. VAN ALEN RENOUNCES LAND OF HIS BIRTH.

By Boston American Leased Wire.

New York, Sept. 10.—James J. Van Alen, son-in-law of Mrs. Astor, man of millions, one-time social arbiter of Newport, dilettante, politician and globe trotter, has resolved to live abroad, abandon his American citizenship and become a naturalized subject of King Edward.

Following the example of his expatriated kinsman, William Waldorf Astor, who is now visiting America as a full fledged commoner of England, Van Alen—known to his intimates as "Jim"—will dispose of his [illegible] Newport and establish a residence in the British Isles.

"Wakehurst," the Van Alen estate at Newport, has been placed on the market, and its eccentric owner has leased for a term of years, with an option of its purchase, Rushton Hall, in Nottinghamshire, one of the handsomest country estates in Merrie England.

Mr. Van Alen, accompanied by his daughter, Miss May Van Alen, came to New York yesterday for the purpose of purchasing a residence for her in the fashionable section of the city in the [illegible] of Mrs. Astor's home [illegible] Miss Van Alen will [illegible] here. "We Princes and Princesses Are Flesh and Blood," She Says; "All the Courtiers of Europe Are Corrupt."

By Princess Louise of Coburg.

We princes and princesses are creatures of flesh and blood, like the rest of mankind, and although in youth every endeavor is made to thwart nature in our education, the time comes when nature will be avenged and strips us of all etiquette.

My father was seldom home, but was usually with the youngest and prettiest lady in waiting. Mother [illegible] this so cruelly that she often confided her sorrows to a well known general in Brussels.

When I reached a marriageable age the Almanach de Gotha was consulted, not the future bride. Some [illegible] waiting whom father honored with his gracious favor chose Prince Philip. Mother was greatly displeased, but her opinion had already ceased to count in the family councils. I was very sad, for I had a great affection for a young gardener of distinguished character and bearing.

During the first fortnight of my marraige my husband, whom I had found to be a drunkard, burst into my bedroom, accompanied by three noblemen as drunk as he. I was angered, so he horsewhipped me. I bore the traces of his brutality for weeks.

All the courtiers of Europe are corrupt. They give me a feeling of nausea. To all who assert that I have acted badly I answer that they lie. I now take what was scandalously stolen from me. I am the wife of Count Mattasich-Keglevitch. I am free.

The woman hesitatingly looked for a [illegible] Snell, then at the [illegible] and turning with a [illegible] almost of appeal, said to [illegible]:

"He said that if I did not leave Burden Head's house he would come at the dead of night, and after [illegible] both of us over the head with a [illegible] would set fire to the house and burn us within it."

Snell [illegible] the woman and she shrank [illegible] grim smile. And then [illegible] he [illegible] had cocked his head to one side as is his wont, and listened with composure to the woman's story.

FORMER FIANCEE DEFIANTLY FACES SNELL IN MURDER TRIAL

MISS SHERMAN A DRAMATIC FIGURE.

SNELL'S COUNSEL EXPECTS ACQUITTAL

By Hugo Dubuque,

Chief Counsel for Angles Snell.

It is extremely possible that Snell will be placed upon the stand when the defence opens next week. I do not believe that Snell can be convicted if the evidence thus far submitted by the prosecution is not further strengthened

The prosecution has thus far failed to establish the slightest connection between Kirby's death, and the fastening of the crime upon Snell. There was not an exclusive opportunity for Snell to commit the crime, as it might as easily have been done, if there was a crime, by members of the mackerel fleet.

[illegible] deeply impressed the [illegible] of Snell [illegible] by the same [illegible] prosecution [illegible] removed one of its [illegible] when she swore [illegible] large amount of money [illegible] prior to Kirby's disappearance.

[illegible] the [illegible] that Tillinghast Kirby [illegible] that avarice entered into the hatred that caused him to murder the man who went fishing on that September day [illegible] ago and never returned alive

And so when Miss Sherman [illegible] had exhibited to her a [illegible] Lawyers Dubuque and [illegible] expressed their satisfaction [illegible] prosecution had hoped to show that Snell had come into this money after Kirby's disappearance.

Wrangle Between Counsel

Throughout the cross-examination by Mr Dubuque, who put question after question to Miss Sherman, with almost brutal insistence, the woman maintained a comparative composure, and refused to become either muddled or irresolute in her answers.

A [illegible] occurred between counsel when Mr [illegible] attempted to offer in evidence two [illegible] letters written by Snell to Miss S[illegible]

"Isn't the purport of these two letters," said Mr Dubuque, "as follows: 'Sadie, you tell the truth and so will I, and everything [illegible]'?"

Before Miss Sherman could answer the [illegible] the letters were excluded by the court. Very freely Miss Sherman admitted [illegible] they were filled with endearing terms [illegible] glance at the cross-examiner and another [illegible] Snell as she said

"You ask if I have a feeling against the [illegible] Why shouldn't I have? Yes, [illegible]"

Threatened Him With Arrest.

[illegible] direct examination [illegible] Snell did not return to [illegible] Head house until very late in the afternoon.

[illegible] if she had told Edward T. [illegible] Snell had never ill treated her and that he was as kind as could be, Miss Sherman was positive in her statement that she had told Bannon nothing of [illegible]

[illegible] asked if she had stated that Bur[illegible]

[illegible] the questioning as follows:

[illegible] Did Snell make any statement to you [illegible] what the officers would do to you?

[illegible] would shut me [illegible] five years for living with me [illegible] the statement [illegible] Kirby's disappearance

Q What did Snell say? A. He said the [illegible] "Sleere [illegible] you up, and will give you three or [illegible] years for living with me."

[illegible] occasion of Snell's statement [illegible] to have him arrested

Mr Dubuque asked if, after the Snell-Head fight, there was talk of criminal prosecution, and she replied in the affirmative.

"The Man in the Motor Boat."

Next in importance to the testimony of Miss Sherman was that of Philip Grinnell, a seafaring man, of Westport Harbor, who was mentioned in the opening address to the jury by District Attorney Swift as "the man in the motor boat."

There was an expectant craning of necks in the crowded court room when Grinnell took the stand, as his evidence was expected to largely fasten the crime upon Angles Snell.

He testified that he went out in his fourteen foot motor boat on September 9, 1903. He left Westport Harbor in the forenoon and proceeded to the whistling buoy off the "Old Cock" spindle, two miles southwest of Gooseberry Neck. He got there about 1 p. m., and after fishing there went to the Hen and Chickens Reef and left there at 4 o'clock as he happened to look at his watch

Grinnell then testified that he left [illegible] to the western part of Gooseberry Neck and reached that point shortly afterward. He said he saw no other small boats while on the way, either east or west and, looking at his watch again, found that it was [illegible] o'clock. Then he started for home, making directly for the spindle. On his course he saw a sharpie [illegible] west of the spindle and nearly one-quarter of a mile from it. The sharpie had a sail up, but was standing still with sail flapping.

Couldn't Say He Was Snell.

Grinnell said that he could see a man standing up in the boat, and he appeared to be either casting or pulling lobster pots

"As we drew together," continued Grinnell, "the sharpie, which was of dark color, that I later saw was green, was taking a southeasterly [illegible] When I came up to it and passed within 100 to 200 yards, and I [illegible] distinguish the color of the boat, which was green."

"Did you know the defendant, Angles Snell, at the time?" asked the District Attorney

"[illegible]," said Grinnell

"Did you know him?"

[illegible]

"Did you know the defendant Angles Snell at that time?"

"No," answered [illegible] and in tense stillness in the [illegible] "I never saw the man in the green sharpie before and I do not know now who he is," and as Grinnell uttered these words that for the time being removed any direct connection with the crime, it is certain that Snell, who had been looking intently at the witness, appeared visibly relieved

On cross examination Grinnell was certain as to the times mentioned, and [illegible] said he was positive as to the distance [illegible] separated his motor boat and [illegible] with its mysterious occupant

Kirby in White Sharpie.

Two important witnesses for the prosecution were Warren F. Viera and Eli Handy, of South Westport, who both testified to seeing a green and a white sharpie close together near the Three Rocks, on the western side of Gooseberry Neck, on the afternoon that Kirby disappeared. They also identified Kirby as the man in the white sharpie

Clifford A. Gifford, of South Westport testified to [illegible] seeing Kirby on the west side of the [illegible] in a white sharpie He also said he saw a green sharpie approach the white sharpie

Warren A. Gifford, father of Clifford corroborated his son's testimony

David C Palmer, of Westport Point, said he saw a green sharpie at 3 30 o'clock to the northwest and eastward of Little Spithwest Rock He saw no other boat.

[illegible] He said [illegible] a green [illegible]

[illegible] was at Gifford's at Horse Neck on the day Kirby's [illegible] ashore. Saw body and next [illegible] talk with Snell. When Snell saw Kirby's body, witness said, Snell shivered, blanched and his knees shook Witness said to Snell at time: "Pretty slick job, eh" Snell answered, "I know nothing about this affair, gentlemen"

Jury Goes to Church To-day.

Court adjourned [illegible] 10 [illegible] o'clock Monday [illegible] cell in the House of Correction, and the first week of what is proving to be one of the most bitterly fought murder trials in the history of [illegible] ends with a most encouraging out[illegible]

FORMER FIANCEE GLAD SHE IS FREE

By Miss Sarah Sherman,

Former Fiancee of Angles Snell.

I am at last freed from the domination of Angles Snell. No one can blame me for ceasing to care for him after his brutality to me. For fifteen years I worked for him and loved him, but now the scales are lifted from my eyes and I feel as if a new world was opened up to me.

NATURE'S FORCES A POWER IN SNELL CASE, SAYS ATTORNEY-GENERAL

BY HERBERT PARKER,

Attorney-General of the Commonwealth.

The case is surrounded by picturesque conditions and circumstances of sea and shore. We have to inquire of the mystery, the terror and the fascinations of the ocean in its varying moods.

Ordinarily, even in cases such as that on trial, we are chiefly, almost entirely, concerned with the investigation of human motive and action; but here the forces of nature itself may become the decisive elements in determining the truth.

I have never been concerned in any case which involved a more interesting or absorbing study and investigation. Its incidents are sombre and melancholy, but they deeply excite the imagination of all who are sharing in its responsibilities.—Statement dictated to representative of the SUNDAY AMERICAN.

HEART-SICK MOTHER PRAYING FOR SNELL

New Bedford, Sept. 10—Bowed down with the weight of four score years and three, heart-sick and weary with the deep grief and suspense over the fate of her [illegible] and best beloved child, Mrs. Mary [illegible] Snell, mother of the man charged with the murder of Tillinghast Kirby, yesterday granted her [illegible] interview to a reporter of the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN.

I cannot believe that my dear son is guilty of this black crime that they have charged against him," she said with streaming eyes.

"I know that he is innocent and will believe so to the day of my death."

"Is it not terrible that such unhappiness should come upon one in my old age! Always have I tried to bring up my boys to lead honorable and manly lives, and my heart is breaking to think in his fifty [illegible] my beloved son is on trial for [illegible]

Her Best Beloved Son.

"Every night I go down on my knees and pray that he may be cleared of this terrible accusation. He is my best loved and eldest son, and the good God will not bring such sorrow upon me in my extreme old age as to send him to the electric chair

Mrs. Snell is a sweet faced, gray haired woman of [illegible] whose husband Captain Angles Snell, amassed a considerable [illegible] in the days when whaling flourished in New Bedford. Through [illegible] her family, and now the trial of her son for murder in the first degree has well nigh broken her strength and filled her days with sorrow and deep travail

"I cannot express to you," she continued "how happy I am when you tell me that he asked particularly of me at court and wished to send me one of the photographs [illegible] took of him. He loves his mother and his mother knows that he is innocent, and no matter what happens, even though he be convicted, he will know that I believe him to be the same good man that he has always been to me.

"For one year I have worried how his case would turn out. It was a little over a year ago that I saw him [illegible] the day of his arrest I have prayed that he would be cleared, and I know that in good time he will be freed from this terrible charge."

With tears in her dim blue eyes, and with sternly suppressed sobs shaking her feeble [illegible], the good woman told of how A[illegible], her first born, had gone to sea on a whaling vessel in his sixteenth year; of how later he had tired of whaling and had come [illegible] and how later still [illegible] that are but a few [illegible] from the Snell homestead

"He was [illegible] of a roving disposition," she said, "but he was never vicious, never unkind, never without a good heart, and to my death I can never believe that he is guilty of this black crime."

BRENNAN HELD AS STABBING SUSPECT

James E. Brennan, sixty-five years old, of No. 24 Harvard street, is held by the police, suspected of being the assailant of [illegible] Wallace of Peabody, who [illegible] at the Relief Station is in a critical condition as a result of stab wounds inflicted, the police of the Lagrange street station believe, by Brennan

According to the police, while Brennan was [illegible] street Friday night, he was jostled by Wallace Hot words followed [illegible] Brennan denies all knowledge of the affair.

HOW THE PRINCESS LOUISE BECAME FREE

Coburg, husband of Princess Louise, was later sent to prison on a charge of forgery.

To-day Count Keglevich and [illegible] Louise are [illegible] quartered [illegible] hotel in the central section of this city. The Princess Louise, apparently in the best of health and spirits, received a representative of the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN in her apartments to-day and pleasantly discussed her reunion with Count Keglevich Conveyed Messages.

"The Count," said Princess Louise, "contrived to convey messages to me at the hotel at Bad Elster through a hotel waiter When all was arranged for our departure I left the hotel at 2 o'clock in the morning and was immediately joined by Count Keglevich, who was waiting for me in a big automobile, in which we made a wild dash for Berlin."

Both Count Keglevich and the Princess Louise declared they [illegible] remain together despite the efforts of Prince Philip of Coburg, the husband of the Princess, or of King Leopold, her father

After the elopement from the imperial palace Count Keglevich was arrested on a charge of forgery, and for a period of [illegible] years he lay in prison. During the whole of that time, the Princess Louise, accompanied by two physicians and a serving maid, was detained [illegible] a sanitarium at [illegible], near Dresden [illegible] his freedom [illegible] Keglevich declared he would write a [illegible] the events kept [illegible] imperial orders [illegible] In [illegible] the scandal of his [illegible] Louise.

Romantic Features.

To accomplish the rescue of his Princess Count Keglevich mingled romance with the modern inventions of to-day. Figuring in the escape of the Princess from Coburg are a rope ladder, domino disguises and an automobile.

Three weeks ago the Princess Louise and her retinue of [illegible] arrived at Bad Elster where apartments were taken [illegible] two days later [illegible] used as a country [illegible] at the same hotel [illegible] two days later when the serving maid went to call [illegible] Princess Louise, it was discovered that during the night her highness had disappeared. A [illegible] investigation [illegible] the fact that Count Keglevich [illegible] the guise of the country gentleman, had also disappeared, as had also a big red automobile.

The fact that Count Keglevich has carried out his purpose in [illegible] the Princess Louise, despite all the [illegible] taken by her father, the King of [illegible] [illegible] evenness of purpose and the mathematical accuracy with which he has accomplished the seemingly impossible, makes it apparent that startling revelations are to be [illegible] in the [illegible] future

Outlines First Meeting.

In [illegible] Count Keglevich outlines his initial meeting with his divinity. He tells how he was riding on a spirited horse on a country road near Brussels, when he passed the carriage in which the Princess was riding. "An electric shock passed through my soul," writes the Count. "From that day continually for a year he made it his part [illegible] to ride on the same [illegible] and pass the royal carriage.

He declares that at the end of a year he was fortunate enough to be invited to a social function, at which he was formally presented to the Princess Louise. The next day he was appointed master of the royal stables, and within a month he had the delight of teaching the Princess the art of riding a horse

"Then," continues the Count, "began the troubles which have been the talk of all Europe for the past six years Prince Philip of Coburg decided he did not appreciate the attentions which he claimed I accorded his wife, the Princess Louise, and as a result the latter was hauled before her [illegible] father and after a stormy [illegible] was finally ordered to a retreat near Dresden

Demanded Satisfaction.

"Prince Philip then demanded satisfaction," says Keglevich, "and a duel followed in which both principals fired twelve shots without inflicting injury. We then resorted to swords, with the result that Prince Philip was slightly wounded in the [illegible] hand, and the incident was declared closed

[illegible] the meetings which were [illegible] for more than a year [illegible] A strange fatality [illegible] It frequently [illegible] I went to the opera [illegible] to take [illegible] on such occasions I saw the Princess in her box. I have stood for hours in the street feeling that she would pass. I was never mistaken. [illegible]

[illegible] to the Princess Louise by [illegible] Stephanie, [illegible] essay on the divinity of [illegible] And now after seeing her [illegible] a year I have been presented [illegible] Louise, and have spoken to my [illegible] for the first time."

Two Hundred Tenants of Newcastle Court Aroused Over Series of Breaks That Have Lately Been Made There

The activity of burglars at Newcastle Court, one of the fashionable Back Bay apartment houses, has caused considerable excitement among the 200 tenants of that building most of whom are women

One successful burglary and two other attempts is the record of the marauders up to date, and the police are making strenuous efforts to run down the guilty persons.

The victim of the thieves was W. H. Hayes, of the restaurant firm of Hayes & Co., whose aged mother had a thrilling experience with the burglars. Alone in the apartment, Mrs. Hayes was awakened about 2 o'clock last Thursday morning to find a revolver pressed against her face by a man

"Where are the valuables?" demanded the man. "Tell me, and do it right away."

"I do not know," said the frightened woman. "Mr. and Mrs. Hayes are away They took their valuables with them."

Revolver Pointed at Her.

The lights in the dining room showed Mrs Hayes that the man had two companions who were apparently searching for valuables. While the two other men ransacked the apartment the one man kept the revolver pointed at the helpless woman.

When the two searchers had finished their work they approached the bed, and one of them took Mrs Hayes by the hand

"Is that all the jewelry you have?" he asked, seeing a plain gold band ring on her hand

"Yes," she said. "What do you want to do with me?"

"We are not going to harm you," one of the men replied

The man who held the pistol pressed it closer to her head and warned her not to move or light a match for twenty minutes

Miss Gertrude Sturtivant, who occupies Suite No. 4 of House No. 4, was awakened about two weeks ago by hearing some one lift up the window of her room, and calling to Miss Ida Fuller, who was with her at the time, jumped up. C[illegible] Sept. 10.—Thousands of the old [illegible] strikers applied at the stock yards today for their old places in accordance with the terms of peace which settled the great strike. Fearing a clash with strike breakers, police were massed at the yards to maintain order among the throngs of thousands of pushing, elbowing workers.

At the [illegible] McNeil & Libby plant six girls and twelve men, all former employes, were picked out at once and put to work. At Swift's, where over [illegible] of the former employes gathered for their old places many were put to work. At the Armour plant the old men were taken back very slowly.

Members of the Sheep Butchers' Union, numbering about 1000, asserted that they would not go back to work unless all their members are reinstated at once.

Since A[illegible] when he arrived in New York on the White Star liner Celtic, His Grace, the Archbishop, has been touring Canada, spending the greater part of his time in and about Quebec.

Contrary to general anticipations, J. Pierpont Morgan, who has secured the residence of J. Montgomery Sears, for the entertainment of visiting Bishops who will [illegible] attend the convention, the New York [illegible] will have [illegible].

Plans Now Complete.

According to the plans now [illegible] adopted, the entertainment of the Archbishop of Canterbury [illegible] Trinity Church and an informal breakfast served at one of the down town hotels, [illegible] finally the presentation of dignitaries of the American church to the distinguished visitor.

The programme thus far prepared has been arranged under the personal supervision of Bishop Lawrence, who has been spending the greater part of the Summer at the home of Bishop Mackay Smith at Bar Harbor in company with Bishop Potter of New York.

[illegible] visiting prelate who expressly requested, in a letter sent personally to Bishop Lawrence, that he be spared the fatigue incident to a series of receptions inasmuch as he would be more or less busy superintending affairs of his own charge during the time he was in this city.

It is generally known among churchmen of this country, that despite the fact that the Archbishop of Canterbury receives a salary of $7[illegible] a year, he is more than ordinarily plain and simple in his daily life and habits.

Accompanying His Grace is his wife, and his secretary and domestic chaplain, the Rev. H. [illegible] Holden, and the Rev. J. H. Ellison, Vicar of Windsor. The entire party will be taken care of at the home of Bishop Lawrence.

The Archbishop of Canterbury was born in 1848, was educated at Harrow and Trinity College, Oxford. In 1877 he was appointed chaplain and secretary to Archbishop Tait, whose daughter he married [illegible] later. In 1883 he was appointed Dean of Windsor and private chaplain to Queen Victoria. His subsequent promotion to the Bishoprics of Winchester and Rochester followed in rapid order, and in 1903 he was translated to the primatal see of Canterbury.

Never before in the history of the Church of England has the Archbishop of Canterbury visited the United States, and the fact that he was next in power and importance to the King himself made it necessary that he receive the consent of King Edward VII before he could leave his charge and set sail for America.

It is anticipated that His Grace will remain in this city until October 9, on which date he is expected to return to New York city, where for a few days he will remain as the guest of Bishop Potter.

AMERICAN BANKER ESCAPES FROM BRIGANDS.

Elland Sawed Ropes Apart While His Mexican Captors Slept, and Wandered for Days in the Mountains

Rosewell, N. M., Sept. 10.—John Elland, president of the Bank of Portales, who was captured by brigands twenty-four days ago, has arrived safely at his home in Portales. During all the time Elland was bound with ropes by the Mexican outlaws who constantly were on the move. The prisoner was fed solely on meal and as a result became emaciated.

Elland made his escape at night after passing hours in rubbing his bands against a sharp rock. At length when they were partly severed, he managed to break them and securing weapons from the sleeping outlaws, mounted a horse and rode home.

"I was captured August 6 by four men," he said, "and they robbed me of everything I had. I think it was in the State of Sonora, Mexico. They immediately carried me to the mountains and I was made to walk every day and had very little to eat.

"At night I was tied with ropes. On pain of instant death the bandits made me write a letter to my wife demanding ransom, compelled me to sign the name of George Reese, and made me misspell the name.

"For four days I wandered through the mountains in search of a road, living on berries, seeds, rabbits and young birds, and finally reached a railroad at a distance of sixty miles from where I started.

"I beat my way on a lumber train to Douglas, Ariz., and then to El Paso, Tex., where I borrowed money on which to come to Portales."

SOLAR PLEXUS FOR RACE SUICIDE BY MELROSE SQUAD.

Five Babies in Ten Days Is Record That Finest Now Boast Of—Wag Advertises for Five Baby Carriages

WANTED—Five second-hand baby carriages, in good condition for [illegible] Melrose police. Apply to [illegible] William B. Doherty.

On the strength of five new babies born to Melrose Police Department a call is issued for baby carriages to wheel the offspring of Melrose's "finest." Congratulations are also expected from President Roosevelt on this solar plexus blow to the race-suicide peril.

Melrose police are having their hands full of late. Five of them are encumbered with new-born babes. After they have trodden their beats through the long work hours they find a chance at home to walk the floor with their [illegible]. It is a great fall, in a way, from the majesty of a belted "cop" down to toting a wrathy infant to and fro. It is a tax on the strength, say the policemen.

The call for baby carriages appears in an advertisement published in Melrose local papers, signed with the name of William H. Doherty, as purchasing agent for Melrose police.

The five new babies came within the past ten days. First Bedford M. Rand announced himself as a happy father. Then Frank N. Pierce. Third was the infant son of M. J. Hanley. He was followed by a diminutive future policeman at the home of Louis B. Heaton. Friday A. N. Hathaway announced "It's a girl."

The conversation in the station guard room has taken an unusually domestic turn of late. It used to be about scraps and arrests, holdups and law breakers—daily experiences of the bold policemen on their beats. Now scraps of talk like this come from the sanctuary:

[illegible]

"What do you do when he won't stop yelling?"

"And I didn't sleep a wink. I tell you, this married life is ——"

And so it goes. The new fathers are being coached by the old ones, of whom there is a genteel sufficiency. The eleven members of the force have twenty-two children in all. Chief McLaughlin is twice a father, but his example has been surpassed by some of his patrolmen. These experienced ones are coaching the novices in the proper way to arrest a baby's crying, suppress infantile rioting, maintain order in the cradle and otherwise keep the domestic peace.

Meanwhile, the "cops" are receiving all sorts of free advice along their beats as well. They are considered a credit to the city.

Oyama Reports Rich Booty Captured

London, Sept. 10.—The first authentic report in many days from Japanese official sources regarding the practical results of the capture of Liao Yang arrived to-day from Tokio in the form of a report made by Field Marshal Oyama.

Contrary to the official claim of the Russians that practically no ammunition and [illegible] were left in the city, all that could not be removed having been burned, the report states that the enemy looted [illegible] near the station and [illegible] provisions and ammunition were found intact, ready for shipment, however. They have been removed on Japanese transport trains.

[illegible] Oyama reports further that the Japanese, before leaving the vicinity of Liao Yang, buried more than 3,000 Russian [illegible] haste of evacuation of the city.

One portion of the report is based upon information obtained from Chinese sources. According to these, the Russians sent 10,000 wounded in trains northward several hours before leaving Liao Yang.

Field Marshal Oyama believes that the main force of the enemy is now north of the Hun River.

STRUGGLE IN EAST WARNING FOR WEST

By Jack London,

Written Expressly for the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN.

[illegible] American-Journal-Examiner.) [illegible] West [illegible] of Japan than [illegible] ing from Korea to China. To achieve a correct appreciation of the Chinese, the traveller should first sojourn [illegible] the Koreans for several months, then, one fine day, cross over the Yalu into Manchuria. It would be of exceptional [illegible] appreciation did he cross over the Yalu on the heels of a hostile and alien army.

[illegible] in the affairs of [illegible] of the worth [illegible] tested thus, the Korean [illegible] nerve to retain [illegible] his land. The [illegible] he may have [illegible] on his back, [illegible] windows, and away he [illegible]. Later he may return some goods, chattels, doors and windows, impelled by insatiable curiosity for a "look see." But it is curiosity merely [illegible]. He is prepared to bound away on his long legs at [illegible] or trouble.

Scent Danger, Then Flee.

Northern Korea was a desolate land when the Japanese passed through. Villages and towns were deserted. The fields lay untouched. There was no ploughing or sowing, no green things growing. [illegible] nothing was to be purchased. One carried one's own food with him, and food for horses and servants was the anxious problem that waited at the day's end. In many a lonely village not an ounce of grain or anything could be bought, and yet there [illegible] stalwart Koreans, smoking [illegible] pipes and chattering, chattering [illegible] chattering. Love, money or force [illegible] not procure from them a horseshoe or a horseshoe nail. "Upso" was their invariable reply. "Upso," cursed word! which means "Have not got."

Came Back for a "Look See."

They had tramped probably forty miles that day, down from their hiding places, just for a [illegible] they would cheerfully tramp, chattering all the way over what they had seen. Shake a stick at them as they stand chattering about [illegible] the gloom of the [illegible] tall, flitting [illegible] great [illegible] and not but [illegible] coolies, but [illegible] den and robbed, with [illegible], by every chance [illegible] Korean [illegible] islands [illegible] stands had been [illegible] of two [illegible] had been [illegible]. The echoes of the [illegible] died away. The trains of Japanese wounded and Japanese dead were trailing by.

Different in China.

On the conical hill a quarter of a mile away the Russian dead were being buried in their trenches and in the shell holes made by the Japanese. And here [illegible] things were [illegible] the [illegible] from [illegible] labor long enough to sell me a [illegible]. Nearby was the smoke-blackened ruin of the farmhouse, fired by the Russians when they retreated from the river bed. Two men were removing the debris, clearing the confusion preparatory to rebuilding. They were clad in blue. Pigtails hung down their backs. I was in China.

[illegible] into the [illegible] were [illegible] and shouting [illegible] pipes and [illegible]. The day before the Russians had been there, a bloody battle had been fought, and to-day the Japanese were there. But what was that to talk about? Everybody was busy. Men were offering eggs and chickens and fruit for sale upon the street, and [illegible] as I live, bread, in small round loaves, or buns. I rode on into the country. Everywhere a toiling population was in evidence. The houses and walls were strong and substantial. Stone and brick replaced the mud walls of the Korean dwellings.

Toil Far Into the Night.

Twilight fell and deepened, and still the ploughs went up and down the fields, the sowers following after. Trains of wheelbarrows, heavily loaded, squeaked by, and Peking carts, drawn by from four to six [illegible] mules, ponies or [illegible] cows, even, with their new-born calves tottering along on puny legs outside the traces. Everybody worked. Everything worked. I saw a man mending the road. I was in China.

I [illegible] to the city of Antung and lodged with a merchant. He was a grain merchant. Corn he had, hundreds of bushels, stored in great bins of stout matting, peas and beans in sacks, and in the backyard his millstones went round and round, grinding out meal. Also, in his backyard were buildings, containing vats sunk into the ground, and here the tanners were at work making leather. I bought a measure of corn from mine host for my horses, and he overcharged me thirty cents. I was in China.

War, but Trade Went On.

Antung was jammed with Japanese troops. It was the thick of war. But it did not matter. The work of Antung went on just the same. The shops were wide open, the streets were lined with pedlers. One could buy anything, get anything made. I dined at a Chinese restaurant, cleansed myself at a public bath in a private tub with a small boy to assist in the scrubbing. I bought condensed milk, butter, canned vegetables, bread and cake. I repeat it, cake, good cake. I bought knives, forks and spoons, granite-ware dishes and [illegible]. There were horseshoes and horseshoers. A worker in iron realized for me new designs of mine for my tent poles. My shoes were sent out to be repaired. A barber shampooed my hair. A servant returned with cornbeef in tins, a bottle of port, another of [illegible] and beer, blessed beer, to wash out from my throat the dust of an army. It was the land of Canaan. I was in China.

Types of Industry.

The Korean is the perfect type of inefficiency, of utter worthlessness. The Chinese is the perfect type of industry. For sheer work no worker in the world can compare with him. Work is the breath of his nostrils. It is his solution of existence. It is to him what wandering and fighting in far lands and spiritual adventure have been to other peoples. Liberty to him epitomizes itself in access to the means of toil. To till the soil and labor interminably with rude implements and utensils is all he asks of life and of the powers that be. Work is what he desires above all things, and he will work at anything for any [illegible].

During the storming of the Taku forts [illegible] carried scaling ladders at the front of the assault and planted them against the walls. He did this, not from a sense of patriotism, but for the invading foreign devils because they paid him a daily wage of fifty cents. He is not frightened by war. He accepts it as he does rain and sunshine, the changing of the seasons, and other natural phenomena. He prepared for it, [illegible] of the guns still reverberating in the distance [illegible] only bending to his usual tasks.

Profits by Battle.

Nay, war itself bears fruit whereof he may pick. Before the dead are cold or the burial squads have arrived, he is out on the field stripping the mangled bodies, [illegible] the shrapnel and ferreting in the shell holes for slivers and fragments of iron.

The Chinese is no coward. He does not [illegible] windows to [illegible] which [illegible] same place three small pears. What if one soldier persist in taking away with him three large pears? What if there be twenty other soldiers jostling about him? He turns over his sack of fruit to another Chinese and races down the street after the three feeling pears and the soldier [illegible] he does not return till he has wrenched away one large pear from that soldier's grasp.

No Foe to Progress.

Nor is the Chinese the type of permanence which he has been so often designated. He is not so ill disposed toward new ideas and new methods as his history would seem to indicate. True, his forms, [illegible] methods have been permanent these many centuries; but this has been due to the fact that his Government was in the hands of the learned classes, and that these governing scholars found their salvation by suppressing all progressive ideas. The ideas behind the Boxer troubles and outbreaks over the introduction of railroads and other foreign devil machinations have emanated from the minds of the literati and [illegible] hand, his susceptibility to new ideas has been well demonstrated [illegible] grasped far more clearly the Western code of fastness, the Western ethics of business, than has the Japanese. He has learned as a matter of course, to keep his word or his bond.

Ahead of the Japs Here.

As yet the Japanese business man has failed to understand this. When he has signed a time contract, and when changing conditions causes him to lose by it, the Japanese merchant cannot understand why he should live up to the contract. It is beyond his comprehension and repulsive to his common sense that he should live up to his contract and thereby lose money. He firmly believes that the changing conditions themselves absolve him. And insofar, adaptable as he has shown himself to be in other respects, he fails to [illegible] new idea where the Chinese succeeds.

[illegible] millions of him, occupying a vast land of immense natural resources—resources of a twentieth century age of a machine age, [illegible] which are the backbone of commercial civilization. He is [illegible] worker. He is not dead to new forms, new methods, new systems. Under a capable management he can be made do anything. Truly would he of himself constitute the much-heralded Yellow Peril were it not for his present management. This management, his government, is set, crystallized. It is what [illegible] him down to [illegible] as his fathers built. The governing class, entrenched by the precedent and power of centuries and by the stamp it has put upon his mind, will never free him. It would be the suicide of the governing class, and the governing class knows it.

Talk by the Common Tongue.

Comes now the Japanese. On the streets of Antung of Feng-Wang-Cheng, or of any other Manchurian city, the following is a familiar scene. One is hurrying home through the dark of the unlighted streets, when he comes upon a paper lantern resting on the ground. On one side squats a Chinese civilian on his hams, on the other side squats a Japanese soldier. One dips his forefinger in the dust and writes strange [illegible] characters. The other nods understanding, sweeps the dust slate level with his hand, and with his forefinger inscribes similar characters. They are talking. Long ago one borrowed the other's written language; and long before that, untold generations ago, they diverged from a common root, the ancient Mongol stock.

There have been changes, differentiations brought about by diverse conditions and infusions of other blood; but down at the bottom of their being, twisted into the fibres of their constitution, is a heritage in common, a sameness in kind which time has not obliterated. The infusion of other blood, Malay perhaps, has made the Japanese a race of mastery and power, a fighting race through all its history, a race which has always despised commerce and exalted fighting.

Ambition in Full Sway.

To-day, equipped with the finest machines and systems of destruction the Caucasian mind has devised, handling machines and system with remarkable and deadly accuracy, this rejuvenescent Japanese race has embarked on a course of conquest the goal of which no man knows. The head men of Japan are dreaming ambitiously, and the people are dreaming blindly a Napoleonic dream. And to this dream the Japanese clings and will cling with bull-dog tenacity. The soldier shouting "Nippon Banzai!" on the walls of Wiju, the widow at home in her paper house committing suicide so that her only son, her sole support, may go to the front, are both expressing the [illegible] of the dream.

The present disturbance in the Far East marks the clashing of the dreams, for the Slav, too, is dreaming greatly. Granting that the Japanese can hurl back the Slav, and that the two great branches of the Anglo-Saxon race do not despoil him of his spoils, the Japanese dream takes on substantiality. Japan's population is no larger because her people have continually pressed against the means of subsistence. But given poor, empty Korea for a breeding colony and Manchuria for a granary, and at once the Japanese would begin to increase by leaps and bounds. Even so, he would not constitute of himself a Brown Peril. He has not the time in which to grow and realize the dream. He is only forty millions, and so fast does the economic exploitation of the planet hurry on the planet's partition amongst the Western peoples that before he would attain [illegible] requisite to menace, he would [illegible] giants in possession [illegible]

China the Real Peril.

The menace to the Western world lies, not in the little brown man, but in the four hundred millions of yellow men should the [illegible] undertake their management. The Chinese is not dead to new ideas; he is an efficient worker, makes a good soldier and is wealthy in the essential materials of a machine age. Under a capable management he will go far. Japan is prepared and fit to undertake this management.

Not only has he proved himself an apt imitator of Western material progress, a sturdy worker and a capable organizer, but he is far more fit to manage the Chinese than are we. The baffling enigma of the Chinese character is no baffling enigma to him. He understands as we could never school ourselves to understand. Their mental processes are largely the same. He thinks with the same thought—symbols—as does the Chinese, and he thinks in the same peculiar grooves. He goes on where we are balked by the obstacle of incomprehension. He takes the turning which we cannot perceive, twists around the obstacle and [illegible] out of sight in the ramifications of the Chinese mind, where we cannot follow.

Has Dozed for Ages.

The Chinese has been called the type of permanence, and well has he merited it, dozing as he has through the ages. And as truly was the Japanese the type of permanence, up to a generation ago, when he suddenly awoke and startled the world with a rejuvenescence, the like of which the world had never seen before. The ideas of the West were the leaven which quickened the Japanese; and the ideas of the West, transmuted by the Japanese mind into ideas Japanese, may well make the leaven powerful enough to quicken the Chinese.

We have had Africa for the Africander, and at no distant day we are liable to hear "Asia for the Asiatic!" Four hundred million indefatigable workers (deft, intelligent and unafraid to die), aroused and rejuvenescent, managed and guided by 40,000,000 additional human beings who are splendid fighting animals, scientific and modern, constitute that menace to the Western world which has been well named the "Yellow Peril." The possibility of race adventure has not passed away. We are in the midst of our own. The Slav is just girding himself up to begin. Why may not the Yellow and the Brown start out on an adventure as tremendous as our own and more strikingly unique?

Western World Warned.

The ultimate success of such an adventure the Western mind refuses to consider. It is not the nature of life to believe itself weak. There is such a thing as race egotism, and a very good thing it is. In the first place the Western world will not permit the rise of the Yellow Peril. It is firmly convinced that it will not permit the Yellow and the Brown to wax strong and menace its peace and comfort. It advances this idea with persistency and delivers itself of long arguments showing why and how this menace will not be permitted to rise up. To-day far more voices are engaged in denying the Yellow Peril than in prophesying it. The Western world is warned, if not armed, against the possibility of it.

In the second place there is a weakness inherent in the Brown man which will bring his adventure to naught. From the West he has borrowed all our material achievement and passed our ethical achievement by. Our engines of production and destruction he has made his. What was once solely ours he now duplicates, rivaling our merchants in the commerce of the East, thrashing the Russian in sea and land. A marvelous imitator truly, but imitating us only in things material. Things spiritual cannot be imitated, they must be felt and lived, woven into the very fabric of life, and her the Japanese fails.

$6,500,000 LOST IN BIG STRIKE AND LOCKOUT.

Great Contest Between Unions and Builders' Association in New York Enters on Sixth Week, with Both Sides Firm

PROPERTY OWNERS THE HEAVIEST LOSERS

By Boston American Leased Wire.

New York, Sept. 10.—To-day closes the fifth week of the combined lockout and strike of the building trades. About 5,000 men have been on strike continuously since the third week in July. About 20,000 in addition have been locked out since August 8. Both sides are determined to stand firm and thus far there has been no weakening.

It is estimated that the lockout and strike have cost the men $600,000 a week in wages, a total of $3,000,000 for the five weeks of the struggle. It is difficult to arrive at an estimate of the cost to the contractors and owners of buildings in course of construction, upon which work has been delayed, but $3,500,000 is considered an inside amount.

The bulk of the loss falls upon the property owners, because the contractors have clauses in their agreements absolving them of liability for delay in case of strike.

Many buildings which were to have been ready for occupancy by September 1 remain uncompleted, and the prospect of finishing them this winter is slim.

Owners have borrowed on the buildings and the lenders are pressing them for the money. It is predicted that in the end the building trades labor war will prove more disastrous than that of a year ago. The men are suffering severely. Many of them are poverty stricken, because few of the unions were in position to pay strike benefits. Grocers, butchers and other tradesmen who have been carrying accounts for the strikers are clamoring for their money, and landlords are talking about dispossess proceedings.

Lewis Harding, chairman of the press committee of the Building Trades Employers' Association, has received a letter threatening his life if he does not bring about a settlement of the lockout.

BOSTONIANS KNEW AND LOVED 'MOTHER' STEVENS

MRS SARA STEVENS.

Noted Actress Who Has Just Died In St. Louis While Playing in the "Way Down East" Company.

Aged Actress, Who Died Last Week, Played Before Lincoln When He Was Assassinated.

Sara Stevens, the actress who died in St. Paul last week, at the age of seventy, was well known in Boston. "Mother" Stevens, as she was affectionately known, is declared by players who have appeared in company with her to have been one of the sweetest and most lovable women of [illegible]

She was best known in this part of the country by her performance of David's mother in "Way Down East," in which play she was appearing at the time of her death.

Her stage career was a long one, dating from Oct. 27, 1856. She was married while young to John C. Heenan, the noted English pugilist, and retired from the stage. She remained in seclusion for fourteen years, but on the death of her husband returned to the stage.

She was a member of Laura Keene's company playing "Our American Cousin," at Ford's Theatre in Washington, the night President Lincoln was assassinated.

Old-timers say she was very beautiful in her girlhood and she never lost her charm of feature.

"She was never obtrusive or self-seeking," said an actor yesterday. "She just went her way doing what good she [illegible] in the world and carrying sunshine with her."

Relief for the Needy Holds Out Well—Many Operatives Leaving City—More of the Girls Find Work in Boston

Special to the Sunday American.

Fall River, Sept. 10.—"Please say to the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN readers that our situation is better than ever. We believe the manufacturers [illegible] uneasy. We shall continue [illegible] struggle indefinitely or until the Manufacturers' Association comes to its senses."

This is the statement of President [illegible] Golden of the United Textile Workers of America in summing up the strike situation in this city.

When President N. B. Borden of the Manufacturers Association was asked what he had to say on the other side of the controversy he replied:

"We are in no better position to pay the old rate of wages than we were when the cut was [illegible]. There is nothing new in the situation [illegible] there any change since."

COOKED IN BATH; DIES.

Minneapolis, Sept. 10.—Dennis Gill, aged seventy-nine years, was literally cooked to death in a bathtub at the Alexandra apartments, New Jersey and Vermont streets. He went into a bathroom about 9 o'clock, and was heard groaning about an hour afterward. The door was broken down, but the rescuers reached him only in time to see him breathe once or twice before expiring. It is thought that he must have fainted while in the hot water.

GRIM FIGHT OF 16 SAILORS FOR LIFE SUCCEEDS, BUT SHIP IS LOST

Completely tired out by their fifteen [illegible] the sailors that the night would [illegible] end as they made for the light eye of Highland light, at the tip end of Cape Cod. As they came near the land they turned signals which the watchful patrolman of the life saving crew [illegible] answered.

As the beacon from shore sprang into flame the men turned their heads and cheered one another. Then the order [illegible] the signal and their cheers turned to groans, for it said, in the language of the life saving corps, "Stand off. Breakers. Do not try to land."

Battled All Night.

So they battled with wave and fatigue throughout the long night. It required the greatest watchfulness and skill to keep their little boats afloat, and every heart was glad when the red glow in the east announced the rising sun.

The boat commanded by Captain Riley was a mile off shore at this time. Its companion was much nearer, and Chief Officer Frank Johnson, in command, determined to make the effort to land his men through the surf.

Captain Worthen and his crew of life savers from the Highland Light Station were all on the shore, waiting and anxious to do all in their power to save the sailors from meeting death after so brave a fight.

Mate Johnson steered his boat skilfully into the first line of breakers, and at the right moment shouted his command to his men to pull for their lives. They were but a few feet from shore, and the life savers fringed the beach ready to aid in every way in their power.

The boat passed the first line and entered the second. Around and under it the gray sea boiled and surged. The shore was a scant ten yards away, when up from astern came chasing a giant comber. The men pulled with all their strength—to no avail. The treacherous undertow swung the bow a fraction of a foot, the comber broke under the stern in a long line of roaring surf, and in a twinkling the eight men were struggling in the undertow that began to overcome their endeavors and bear them seaward.

Seized Struggling Men.

The life savers ran into the water and seized the struggling sailors. Their cork belts kept them afloat; their strength had not been sapped by a day and a night's struggle against the elements, and one by one the exhausted sailors, some of them almost drowned and unable to help themselves in the slightest, were dragged ashore.

Prompt measures of resuscitation enabled them all to walk, assisted to the life saving station. Heat and dry clothing did much to hasten their recovery.

At once Captain Worthen and his men set out to rescue the other boat load. The lifeboat was successfully launched through the search, after several fruitless attempts, and rowed quickly out to the boat where Captain Riley and his seven men were almost exhausted by their long efforts. They had seen their companions' boat capsize, and [illegible] it certain that some of their comrades had been drowned. As soon as the lifeboat came within hailing distance Captain Riley shouted:

"Did you get them all?"

"Every one!" replied Captain Worthen, and tired as they were the eight in the ship's boat gave a faint cheer for the life savers.

And this was done, with no more serious results than a general wetting in the flying surf—and a wetting is not a serious trouble to a man who has not been dry for twenty-four hours.

When warmth and food and dry clothing had put life and courage into the [illegible] at Peaked Hill bar, they [illegible] their [illegible] stations from the other station, and [illegible] gether many of the sixteen tramped to the nearest point on shore to the scene of the wreck. The Longfellow, valued at $19,000, with $15,000 worth of dynamite below her hatches, lays out there eight miles in fifteen fathoms of water. But her crew was saved to a man.

The crew is still quartered in the Highland and Peaked Hill Bar Life Saving Stations, where they will remain until Monday. Captain Riley will take his crew to Boston where they will await orders from the Dupont Powder Company, the owners.

Captain Riley does not know whether or not the powder company will make any effort to save the dynamite. He has telegraphed the owners for instructions.

Captain and Sailor Tell of the Struggle

By Captain Edward Riley.

Master of the Steamship Longfellow.

The Longfellow was [illegible] to [illegible] Washington, D.C., which we [illegible] on Wednesday. Frank [illegible] of New York was the chief mate. [illegible] Miller of Brooklyn was the chief engineer and Charles Holloway of New York was the assistant engineer. The steamship belonged to the Dupont Powder Company of Wilmington, and was built in 1881 by the Lockwood Manufacturing Company of East Boston.

We had good weather until Thursday [illegible] It didn't worry us any [illegible] passed Nantucket Shoals at 6 o'clock Friday morning before anything happened to [illegible] William Ferris, whose watch it was on deck, called me and told me the ship was leaking. I was surprised on investigation to find that there was already several feet of water in the hold. I don't know what caused the leak.

I called all hands and we rigged the pumps. I thought we should save the boat. The Old Dominion [illegible] passed us and could have [illegible] assist [illegible] necessary, but I [illegible] go on their way.

At [illegible] o'clock the water reached the engines, the fires were put out and I saw we had to abandon the vessel. She went down very fast after that.

Many of the men saved their clothes, but I stayed on deck during the hours we were trying to save the ship, and when we got away I left all my personal effects in my cabin. They are at the bottom of the sea.

We had a very bad night in the boats. The sea was high, we could not land on account of the surf, and it is very fortunate for us that our lives were saved. The men in the other boat from the one I commanded did have a very narrow escape when, in trying to land, their boat was capsized [illegible] They would [illegible]

I have sailed the sea for twenty-five years, but I never had such an experience before, and I hope I shall never have one [illegible] I was the watch on deck when the leak was [illegible] From that minute until we left the ship, fifteen hours afterward, we had a terrible time.

We all worked like beavers to save the ship and cargo [illegible] in more ways than one, for they were partly under the water and we were up to our armpits some of the time. But when the pumps [illegible] there was no more hope.

It looked as if every man on board would be lost. Sailors [illegible] prayed for years stood in four feet of water and prayed that some ship would see our signals and save [illegible] It was a [illegible] night. When we got away from the ship our danger was hardly less. And when we reached shore after pulling so many miles [illegible] to find that the surf was so high that we could not land [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible]

Sunken Dynamite Menace to Ships

Where the Longfellow lays in fifteen fathoms of water, eight miles southeast of Highland Light, lays a gigantic mine, big enough to blow up the biggest war fleet in the world, if it were gathered together directly over it. How serious a menace it is to navigation, and what should be done to remove it is a question that is already agitating sailors and owners of ships.

PEARY TO DASH AGAIN FOR POLE.

Special to the Sunday American.

Bangor, Me., Sept. 10.—[illegible]

[illegible] the plans for [illegible] have been [illegible] the [illegible] will [illegible] and during the [illegible] day [illegible] Peary will make his start in an attempt to reach the pole, which he feels sanguine will be successful.

McKay & Dix, of New York, will build the ship in which the attempt will be made and it will be built at Verona, on the Penobscot River. This much has been decided and it has also been determined what kind of a vessel be used for the trip.

Confident of Success.

The craft will be a bark-rigged steamship of about [illegible] tons built of oak, with extra heavy frame reinforced forward and aft. The shipyard has already been made ready for her construction, and a cargo of hard pine for planking has arrived from the South. But it is announced that as the papers relative to building the new vessel have not been signed and the builders will not give out any additional facts about her.

Since his return from his last trip Commander Peary has felt that if he could try again he would meet with success. His experiences on his last Arctic voyage led him to evolve a theory as to a [illegible] procedure that he feels confident will enable him to reach the spot sought by all Polar explorers. And he has confidently endeavored to interest his friends, bodies of scientific men and the United States Government, from which he holds his commission in the navy.

"On to the Pole."

Now it is announced that he has been successful in raising the necessary funds for the trip, and that there will no delay more than is necessary for the proper equipment of the expedition.

The builders will have plenty of time to finish the special vessel before next Summer, and in the meantime the crew will be carefully selected, the stores and [illegible] will be [illegible] in, and everything that Commander Peary's great experience and the wisdom of his associates can suggest as necessary will be gotten together.

The name of the new vessel has not been made public. It will be constructed to resist the crushing pressure of the Arctic floes, and the [illegible] word of its sailors will be "On to the Pole."

MEN OF NATIONAL PROMINENCE GIVE STRAIGHT-FORWARD EVIDENCE

That Pe-ru-na Cures Catarrh Wherever Located

COL. NATHANIEL SHATSWELL, 1st Mass. Heavy Artillery, Army of the Potomac, past-commander in the Union Veteran Legion, and a prominent Grand Army man, writes from the Museum, U. S. Dept. of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., as follows:

"I commend Peruna as a most agreeable as well as effective medicine. Catarrh and catarrhal colds are checked and generally cured by a judicious use of it. Peruna is a good promoter of digestion and is an excellent remedy for a weak stomach. It tones up the appetite and is not at all disagreeable to take."—Col. Nathaniel Shatswell.

Mrs. W. E. Grissom, Henry, Ellis county, Texas, writes:

"I took Peruna faithfully over two months, and the result is a thoroughly renovated system and a strong, buoyant feeling, to say nothing of a cure of the chronic catarrh. Therefore I shall avail myself of every opportunity to speak of Peruna is a catarrh cure."—Mrs. W. E. Grissom.

A great many remedies to temporarily relieve catarrh have been devised from time to time, such as sprays, snuffs, creams and other local applications, but, as a rule, the medical profession has little or no enthusiasm in the treatment of catarrh.

Peruna cures catarrh wherever located. Peruna is not a guess nor an experiment—it is an absolute scientific certainty. Peruna has no substitutes—no rivals. Insist upon having Peruna.

COL. NATHANIEL SHATSWELL, Washington, D.C.

CHAS W BOWMAN, Lanham, Md

Chas. W. Bowman, 1st Lieutenant and Adjutant 4th M. S. M., Cav. Vols., writes from Lanham, Md., as follows:

"Though somewhat averse to patent medicines, and still more averse to becoming a professional affidavit man, it seems only a plain duty in the present instance to add my experience to the columns already written concerning the curative powers of Peruna.

"I have been particularly benefited by its use for colds in the head and throat. I have been able to fully cure myself of a most severe attack in forty-eight hours by its use according to directions. I use it as a preventative whenever threatened with an attack.

"Members of my family also use it for like ailments. We are recommending it to our friends."—Chas. W. Bowman.

Many households Regard Pe-ru-na as Their Family Medicine.

Peruna operates immediately to strengthen the nerves and give tone to the mucous membranes. There is no other internal catarrh remedy that has proven effective in all cases.

Pe-ru-na Cannot Be Imitated.

Some things may be successfully imitated, but Peruna cannot be. Every one purchasing Peruna should look out for imitations. Examine each package carefully. If you have ever used Peruna or if you have ever tasted it, you are not in the slightest danger of being misled by these imitations, but all those beginning the use of Peruna should beware.

Believe no one who tells you that he has a remedy that is making the same cures that Peruna is making.

Hon. D. L. Russell, ex-Congressman of North Carolina, writes from Wilmington, N. C., as follows:

"I cheerfully join with United States Senator Pritchard and Congressmen Blackburn and Linney in recommending Peruna as an invigorating tonic."
D. L. Russell.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case, and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

On the opposite side reclines a Buddha god of polished [illegible] rare and beautiful.

Father Smith was a student at Andover when the inspiration to write the soul-stirring words of "America" first came to him. The BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN prints to-day a photograph of a page of that first draft of the famous poem.

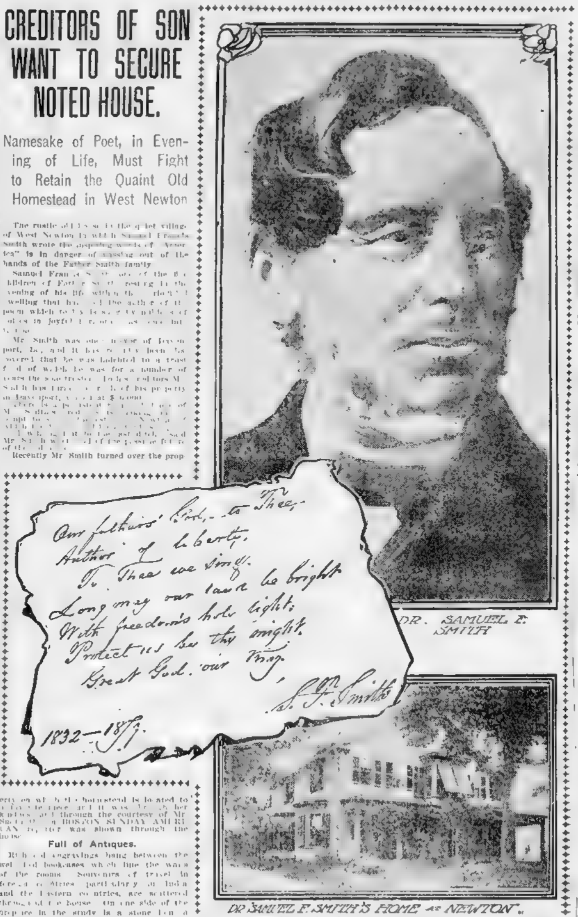
Later Dr. Smith went to Harvard, where he was associated with such men as Oliver Wendell Holmes, Judge B. R. Curtis, [illegible] James Freeman Clarke [illegible] Robbins.

For a year after he left college Mr. Smith engaged in editorial writing. In 1834 he was ordained to the ministry and went to Waterville, Me. Eight years later he settled in Newton, where he remained until his death. He was editor of the Christian Review for seven years, and until 1854 pastor at Newton. [illegible] his death he was engaged in literary work.

Origin of Hymn.

The origin of "America" is very interesting. Many years ago the late William C. Woodbridge brought from Germany a number of school books containing words and music of several songs very popular there. He gave them into the care of Dr. Lowell Mason, who handed them over to Father Smith, asking him to translate anything he might find worthy, or if he preferred, to furnish words of his own composing to such music as might please him.

It was while poring over these old school books on a gloomy February day, 1832, the student at Andover found the music for the poem he had written a few weeks before.



Our fathers' God, - to Thee,
Author of liberty,
To Thee we sing.
Long may our land be bright
With freedom's holy light:
Protect us by thy might,
Great God, our King.

S. F. Smith

1832 — 1877.

The above copy of the last verse of "America" is a facsimile of the original in Dr. Smith's handwriting. The house, the poet's homestead, is threatened with seizure by creditors of Dr. Smith's son.

O'CONNELL CHOICE OF SATOLLI FOR COADJUTOR.

Representations Made to the Pope by the Cardinal May Give Portland Prelate Preference Over Bishop Harkins

[illegible], Sept. 10.—The [illegible] of Cardinal Satolli has given a decided setback to the appointment of a coadjutor archbishop for Boston. The Congregation of the Propaganda had almost decided to promote to the place Bishop Harkins, of Providence, R. I., on the representations made by Cardinal Martinelli. Cardinal Satolli, however, succeeded in impressing the Pope that the matter ought to receive more consideration before any decision is taken.

It is understood here that Cardinal Satolli is making a strong plea for the appointment of his life-long friend, Bishop O'Connell, of Portland, Me., and that he is likely to succeed. Strong objections are being made to the nomination of Bishop Harkins because of his age and ill health.

E. C. Cabot the Designer.

The Boston Theatre was first thrown open to the public on Monday evening, September 11, 1854. Its opening marked the fruition of the hopes of years and the plans of months. Boston had no place suitable for the presentation of grand opera, no stage big enough for the adequate presentation of the spectacular drama, no auditorium large enough to seat the audiences attracted by a popular star.

So it came to pass that a number of prominent citizens formed themselves into a stock company and the Boston Theatre was the result. It was a daring enterprise, for the theatre is surpassed even to-day by but few in the world in point of size and by none in the adequacy of its arrangements for the presenting of any form of production.

Edward C. Cabot was engaged to design the theatre, and it is his monument. Its beauty was lavishly praised by those who attended the opening and it is admired to-day. Modelled after the theatres of the Old World, but without their distinguishing circles of boxes, the graceful curves of its balconies still delight the eye.

Thomas Barry the First Manager.

The opening, fifty years ago to-night, was a brilliant event and a notable one. Two plays, "The Rivals" and "The Loan of a Lover," were presented with a cast comprising many names that were afterward well known. Those among them who became most famous were J[illegible] and Mr and Mrs. John Wood and the Miss Riddle who afterwards became Mrs. Thomas Barry and was for many years the leading [illegible] of the theatre, was also a member of the first company.

Famous Stars of Drama.

The most famous stars of the world in drama and music have appeared upon the stage of the Boston Theatre. In its very first season Edwin Forrest played a round of parts there and J. H. Hackett was seen as Falstaff. The first musical event at the theatre was the appearance of an English opera company in the Fall of its first year and during the Winter the Italian opera company, headed by Grisi and Mario, the foremost operatic stars of that day, played there for four weeks, while New York was accorded only two.

The great Rachel made her first and only appearance in Boston on the stage of the Boston Theatre during its second season, and Adelaide Phillips made her first appearance on any stage there the same [illegible] and Belmont [illegible] there [illegible] Joseph Proctor and Wyzeman Marshall.

In December, 1877, was produced "The Exiles," the first of the famous series of spectacular productions which have been so identified with the name of the theatre. In June 1879 the Boston Ideals came into being on the Boston Theatre stage. In May, 1888, the Bostonians made their first appearance.

HUTCHINS LEADS FOR DEPUTIES' PRESIDENT.

Massachusetts Delegate, Long Secretary of the Convention, Favored Apparently by Majority of the Episcopalians

There is a warm discussion going on in the religious press of the Episcopal Church as to who shall be the president of the House of Deputies at the forthcoming convention. The Rev. Dr. J. S. Lindsay, rector of St. Paul's Church, Boston, was chosen when the convention met three years ago in San Francisco, but since his death no clergyman has been mentioned as an eligible candidate except the Rev. Charles L. Hutchins, D. D., the secretary of that body for twenty-seven years. It now appears that the Diocesan Convention of Massachusetts elected this clergyman a few months ago as a deputy to the general convention, with the understanding that there was a likelihood of his election to the chairmanship of the House of Deputies. Many clergy and laity at a caucus before the regular election prepared the slate of nominations, and the name of Dr. Hutchins was placed on the ballot with this end in view. He is well versed in parliamentary law and will make a good presiding officer.

The difficulty, however, is that Massachusetts has had its share of honor in this respect, having had the Rev. Drs. Burgess and Lindsay in this important office. It is now [illegible] there will be strong [illegible] to any deputy from Massachusetts [illegible] among the laity [illegible] the [illegible] candidate.

The Rev. John Fulton, D. D., of Philadelphia [illegible] this position and his [illegible] knowledge of canon law will [illegible] in his favor, though his pro[illegible] against his [illegible] He is the editor of the Church Standard of Philadelphia.

[illegible] opposed to the election of Dr. Hutchins [illegible] the editor of The Living Church of Milwaukee [illegible] Dr. Hutchins [illegible] the following editorial:

"Twenty-seven years ago, when general convention last met in Boston, a young priest of the Diocese of Massachusetts, the Rev. Charles L. Hutchins, was elected secretary of the House of Deputies, after having already served for six years as assistant secretary. Since that period Dr. Hutchins has regularly been re-elected at each session of general convention [illegible] the preparation of the journals and the other important matters pertaining to his office have been [illegible] in his hands. It is obvious that he is probably, without exception, the most thoroughly informed person in this [illegible] to the legislation of the [illegible] for at least the past quarter century.

"Dr. Hutchins now states that he will not be a candidate for re-election at the approaching [illegible] which will meet in Boston. It will seem strange [illegible] to see another figure than [illegible] occupying the chief position at the secretary's desk. It is beyond question that the members of the House of Deputies will feel it as a serious loss that his services may no longer be given to the House in that capacity.

"There is now a vacancy in the presidency of the House of Deputies. It seems impossible to think of a member of the House who is better able to succeed to that office than is Dr. Hutchins. His familiarity with precedents, his intimate knowledge of the work of past conventions, his keenness in keeping from confusion a perplexing multiplicity of motions [illegible] such wise that their due order may appear, his intimate acquaintance with probably a greater number of the members of the House than that possessed by any other member, the spirit of fairness which he has invariably manifested, the confidence which is reposed in him by churchmen of all schools and no school of thought, all these, with other characteristics, point to Dr. Hutchins as the logical successor of the late president of the House of Deputies."

This paper is the organ of the ritualistic wing of the Episcopal Church. The above editorial has called forth the caustic reply of the editor of the Church Standard, who says in part:

"When the convention is once more about to meet in Boston a report is circulated that the Diocese of Massachusetts has elected Dr. Hutchins as a deputy for the first time, in order to procure his promotion per saltum to the presidency of a house in which he has never before sat. That report is as derogatory to the dignity of the House of Deputies as it is unjust to the Diocese of Massachusetts. The House of Deputies will choose its own president, without interference or assistance from anyone outside its own body, and the surest way to defeat the most unexceptionable candidate is just to overlook that fact."

The matter is being generally discussed throughout the church, and there seems to be little doubt that the conservative element will be forced to yield to the popularity of the Rev. Charles L. Hutchins, D. D., who has captured the side of the ritualists and is popular with the younger clergy and laity.

POLITICS

Democratic Interest Centres in the Gubernatorial Nomination

JOHN R. THAYER.

Leaders Hope Olney Can Be Induced to Accept the Standard for the State Campaign.

Boston Democrats, and those of the rest of the State as well, are looking forward with anxiety to the next meeting of the State Committee, at which it is expected that something will be made known as to the identity of the party candidate for the office of Governor. There are several leaders who would be willing to head the ticket.

Douglas, Thayer and Hamlin Subordinate Their Own Claims for Party Honors.

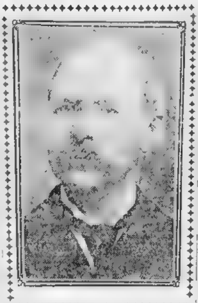
But all of them say that they are not in the field if Richard Olney consents to be the party [illegible]. As yet Mr. Olney has given [illegible] what he will do.

Less than four weeks remain before the assembling of the State convention, and the uncertainty places the party in an unprecedented position. At this season in past years it has been pretty well understood who the candidate would be and active campaigning has often been done even in advance of the State convention. This year the uncertainty has the effect of deferring the prosecution of the campaign for the national ticket.

The brightest ray of hope is found by the leaders in the fact that Mr. Olney did not tell Colonel Gaston, who says he labored with him for weeks, that he would not take the nomination, and the fact that Colonel Gaston entertained the opinion that if sufficient pressure were brought to bear upon Mr. Olney he would yield and take the nomination.

Each Has Strong Following.

Other possibilities for the nomination, men who have been mentioned for the head of the ticket and who are well fitted for the position, according to the belief of the Bay State Democracy, are William L. Douglas, of Brockton; Congressman John R. Thayer, of Worcester, and Charles S. Hamlin, of Boston. Each of the three has a strong following throughout the State, and friends of each believe that their favorite could be persuaded to accept the nomination. Both Mr. Douglas and Mr. Thayer assured the BOSTON AMERICAN that Mr. Olney was the man who could poll the biggest vote in Massachusetts, and each one is said to be working to get Mr. Olney to withdraw his opposition to his own nomination.



WILLIAM L. DOUGLAS.

"He is," said Mr. Douglas, "the strongest Democrat in the State. And I believe that we should all try now to obtain his consent to run."

Congressman Thayer was also outspoken in his statement regarding Mr. Olney as a candidate. "I believe," he said, "that Richard Olney would make a most excellent candidate. We should all urge him to go before the people, and we can assure him of ardent support from every part of the State."

Mr. Hamlin refuses to commit himself regarding the situation but he is regarded as an Olney man.

Believe with Banner in Ex-Secretary's Hands, Victory Might Be Accomplished.

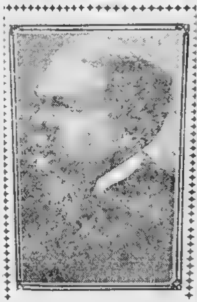
Meanwhile the Democrats of Boston are getting [illegible] now and the [illegible] few surprises and afforded proof of contests in several of the wards which are depended upon annually for [illegible] majorities.

The chief surprise of the local campaign was the return of Martin Lomasney to the field. Mr. Lomasney will run for the House from Ward 8. He had made no announcement of his intention to be a candidate, and nothing was said of it when the sealed envelope containing his nomination paper was filed.

Mr. Lomasney has already had considerable legislative experience. He first entered the public service in 1883 in the Lamp Department. In 1884 he was appointed a health inspector, and served as such until 1892, when he entered the Board of Aldermen. He remained in the Board of Aldermen until 1896, when he was elected to the State Senate. He served two terms in the Senate, and then, the House appealing to him as a field for his activities, he served one term as a representative. He returned to the Board of Aldermen in 1901, and remained there until the close of last year, when he retired.

Hot Senatorial Candidate.

Mr. Lomasney is known as one of the most picturesque figures in Boston politics. He is president of the Hendricks Club, which controls the ward in which he resides, and he has but to say the word when he wishes an office and the voters do the rest.



RICHARD OLNEY.

The hottest local fight among Democrats is in the Second Senatorial District, where James H. Mellen is being opposed for the nomination by W. H. Hayes and Edward Doherty. Several meetings have been held by the partisans of each candidate, and several other meetings are projected.

Ex-Representative [illegible] A. Watson says that he will make a stiff try for the Senatorial nomination in the Fifth Suffolk district. David Leahy, the present Senator from that district, is a candidate for renomination. Another candidate is T. E. Raftery.

W. H. Woods, M. H. Cleary and J. P. Lennon each would like to be a Senator from the Ninth.

There are four candidates for the two

At Next Meeting of the State Committee Some Positive Announcement May Be Made.

Democratic nominations for Representative from Ward 2: Manassah Bradley, D. J. [illegible], J. J. [illegible] and J. J. Flaherty.

"Honest John" Quinn in the Field.

In Ward [illegible] [illegible]

"Honest John" Quinn is again a candidate for Representative from Ward 7. The other candidates are [illegible] Crowley, [illegible] and D. J. O'Connor.

In Ward [illegible] Representatives [illegible] and [illegible] for another term. There are three others in the field: W. F. [illegible], E. F. [illegible] and J. L. Curry.

[illegible] J. H. Condon and W. J. Fitzgerald will look for the nominations for the House from Ward 11.

[illegible], W. L. Newton, P. T. Brazzell, E. F. [illegible] and A. L. O'Toole are the candidates for Representatives from Ward 13.

Ward 14 likewise has five candidates for the two nominations. They are Representative Shiels, Patrick N. H. O'[illegible], John F. O'Hare, R. J. Ware, F. J. Clifford and R. F. Hyde.

Little Republican Activity.

In Ward 15 the voters in the caucus will have a field of five to make their two selections of Representative candidates from. Representative [illegible] will ask for another term, and other candidates will be Councilman [illegible] C. Creed, T. B. Bradley and [illegible].

In Ward 16 there are eight candidates for the House—Richard J. Foley, W. J. Lyons, ex-Councilman Young, J. H. Kelly, W. J. [illegible], M. J. Collins, J. M. Mc[illegible] and W. F. [illegible].

In the other wards matters will be fairly quiet at the caucuses.

At Republican headquarters there are few signs of activity. [illegible] the office [illegible] of the contest for the nomination for State Treasurer [illegible], but there is little else to relieve the quiet.

DEMOCRATS WIN BIG POINT AT LEWISTON.

Outwit Republicans, Who Had Hired All the Halls, by Holding Monster Rally in Park, Despite Orders of the Mayor

Lewiston, Me., Sept. 10.—The Democrats of this city scored a bit over the Republicans tonight when they held a monster open-air meeting at the City Park, after having been refused the right to do so by Mayor Skelton, Republican.

The Republicans have had the City Hall hired for the last four nights of the State campaign, and while having used it only two of these nights, they refused to give over their claims to the Democrats.

The Democrats were absolutely without any place to hold a monster meeting, and yesterday the [illegible] went to Mayor Skelton and asked the privilege of holding [illegible] meeting in City Park. He denied the [illegible].

REPUBLICANS CLAIM 10,000 TO 18,000 DEMOCRATS HOPE TO CUT PLURALITY

By William H. Simpson,
Chairman Maine Republican State Committee.

We will carry the State for Mr. Cobb, the Gubernatorial candidate, by a plurality of 10,000 to 18,000. We will carry every congressional district in the State by pluralities which will be the equal of those which we have had in previous years when the opposition has made a hard fight. We shall elect a majority of the legislative tickets throughout the State and at least twenty-seven of the thirty-one State Senators, with an even chance for the other four.

By Dr. Edgar L. Jones,
Chairman Maine Democratic State Committee.

The Republican claim of 10,000 or 15,000 majority is an old trick of theirs of claiming less than they expect and ought to have. If the people are with them, as they claim, they should have the full majority of four years ago, 33,384, or their majority of 48,246 of eight years ago. But we will take for our standard their majority over the Democrats in the last presidential year. A single vote over that is a gain or less a loss.

BITTER FIGHT FOR THE SENATE IN CHARLESTOWN.

Old Hayes-Corbett Factions Pitted Against Each Other in Struggle for Seat Now Held by Senator Sullivan

Not since the last fight for local control between the late Senator James E. Hayes and Schoolhouse Commissioner Joseph J. Corbett has there been such a bitter contest in the Charlestown district as is being waged at present within the shadow of Bunker Hill monument.

Former Representative William H. Hayes, of Ward 3, a brother of the late Senator, is a candidate for Senator in the district, which comprises Wards 3, 4 and 5 of Boston and Ward 1 of Cambridge, against Representative James J. Mellen, of Ward 3.

Joseph A. Dennison, who carried the district for Congress against Conry and Keliher two years ago, is conducting the Hayes fight, while the present Senator, Charles S. LIVELY CONTEST IN ELEVENTH DISTRICT Lodge Said to Favor Stephen O'Meara for Congress, as Against Hutchinson and Foss.

While in many of the Congressional districts of the city the nominations are inclined to go begging, so far as putting up a stiff contest is concerned, this somnolent condition does not obtain in the Eleventh.

A red hot fight has begun in the Republican camp of that bailiwick for the nomination and the leading aspirants are Eugene N. Foss, Stephen O'Meara and Isaac P. Hutchinson.

When it is understood that Senator Henry Cabot Lodge is recognized as the backer of Mr. O'Meara, the character of battle for supremacy may be judged.

Isaac B. F. Allen [illegible] also [illegible] the shoes of Congressman [illegible] Sullivan. Mr. Hutchinson is regarded as a good vote getter, but his candidacy is somewhat shrouded in mystery. When the chances of Mr. Allen are [illegible] in Republican circles it provokes a concerned smile.

Reckoned Without Foss.

Up to the time of the opening of the nomination papers it was generally considered that O'Meara had a clean field, and that, with so potential a force behind him as Senator Lodge, he would get the coveted [illegible] without any trouble.

But Mr. O'Meara and his friends reckoned without Mr. Foss [illegible]

[illegible] being ousted from power. In Ward [illegible] Deputy Sheriff William W. Campbell is opposed by W. H. H. Myrick, while in Ward 18 former Sealer of Weights and Measures Charles B. Wooley is being fought by Charles H. Seales.

Nominations Begging.

Aside from the Eleventh District, congressional districts containing Boston wards go begging for a nomination. Walter L. Sears, of Ward 7, is the only candidate out for the nomination in the Ninth District to run against Congressman Keliher. Jay B. Crawford, the Ward 16 lawyer, is the main candidate in the Tenth District, being opposed by [illegible] of Ward 14, who is also a candidate for the Democratic nomination against Congressman [illegible] Atwood failed to file any papers.

A hard [illegible] is promised for the nomination for the senate in the Fifth District, comprising Wards 10, 12 and 18, [illegible] where Representative [illegible] of Ward 12, former Representative [illegible] of Ward 10, and [illegible] of Ward 18 will contest for a nomination.

CHAMPIONS LOSE HARD GAME.

Athletics Make the Only Run of the Struggle in Thirteenth.

PITCHER PLANK'S TIMELY SINGLE

IMMENSE CROWD SEES THE BATTLE

By A. H. C. Mitchell.
(Boston American Staff Correspondent With the Team.)

Philadelphia, Sept. 10.—In the most heartbreaking game of the season, which lasted thirteen innings, Plank, after the finest exhibition of pitching seen on the grounds in years, won his own game with a scorching single that flashed by first like a shot. Murphy, who was on second, which base he reached on his own single over second, aided by M. Cross' sacrifice, scored the only run of the game amid tremendous excitement.

Then followed a scene which is not often witnessed on a ball field. Plank was picked up on the shoulders of the fans and pitched headlong into the dressing rooms. Hundreds of cushions were hurled from the second tier of the grand stand down on the heads of the crowd which had swarmed up on the field. The victorious players were cheered to the echo for the gallant fight they put up.

Plank Won His Own Game.

To Plank belongs the credit of the victory. Never was his famous cross-fire delivery more perplexing, and the Champs could do nothing with it. Of the six hits credited to the Bostons only two were of the sizzling kind, the other four being of the scratch order.

The Champions opened up on Plank as though they meant business. In the first inning Selbach lined one to left, and when it got around to Collins he smashed the ball on a line to the right-field fence; but the ball rebounded, and the captain only made one base. Plank only fanned one man, but the boys could only send up flies for outfielders and pops for the infielders.

Old Cy Young pitched one of the best games of his career, fanning twelve men; but, as usual, his team could not hit behind him, and there you are. His feat in retiring the side on strikes in the fifth, with one out and Murphy on third, which base he had reached on his long three-bagger to the center-field flag pole, was a great piece of work.

Cy Applauded.

The fans applauded him to the echo. He literally fanned the three men, as Monte Cross, Powers and Plank swiped and missed the three strikes in each case. The old gentleman had great speed, and kept the seven hits recorded off him scattered in great style. The Bostons fielded without an error, and some of them put up marvellous exhibitions.

Ferris covered an acre of ground, and accepted nine difficult chances. Parent was not much behind, catching Texas leaguers in left and smothering grounders on either side of him. Lachance played a star game, too, saving his fielders by great pickups of thrown balls.

Bostons Hit Ball Hard.

The boys hit the ball a little harder than the score shows. Collins sent a fly to the left field ropes in the ninth which Topsy Hartsel grabbed right off the crowd. Cap repeated the performance in the eleventh, but Topsy was there again. Monte Cross made a wonderful catch of a Texas leaguer from the bat of Stahl in the eighth. Pickering and Hartsel both ran for the ball and Pick didn't see Cross until they collided. Monte dropped the ball, which fell into the arms of Pick. It was a wonderful catch.

Collins Received Cane.

Captain Jimmy Collins was presented with a silver-headed cane by some of his Philadelphia admirers as he stepped to the plate in the first inning. His response was a drive that nearly took a board off the centre field fence. Both teams had more than one good chance to score, but this was particularly the case with the Bostons. In the first Selbach singled, but Parent forced him. Collins singled to centre and Parent was caught off third as the ball bounced back from the fence. In the fourth Collins got a life on Monte Cross's wild throw, but the next two men were easy outs.

In the sixth came the first blow of all, Connolly making a decision that probably cost the game. Parent worked Plank for a pass. Stahl cracked one to Monte Cross, but Murphy muffed the throw and the runners were safe. Then Collins hit a bounder at Murphy, who picked up the ball and made a stab at Stahl, who was running for second, but missed him by two yards as everyone could see except Connolly. Murphy after missing Stahl hesitated, but finally threw to first in time to catch Collins. To the surprise of all hands Connolly called Stahl out and the trick went as a double play.

Instead of having men on second and third with one out, we had only Parent on third with two out. Freeman went out on an easy grounder to Murphy, and the incident was closed. Young, the first man up in the eighth, got as far as second when Monte Cross made a wild throw of his grounder. Noonan played in well for Selbach's bunt, and when it came he nailed

CHAMPS STILL LEAD IN RACE

Although the Champs went down to defeat at the hands of the Athletics in thirteen innings, they still lead, as the Highlanders broke even with the Senators. The tailenders did the Champs a good turn and came near whipping Griffith's men twice. If the Highlanders had won the brace of gamse the Bostons would have dropped to second place. As the Athletics won from Boston and the White Sox lost two games to the Clevelands the Connie Mack bunch moved into third place. The Napoleons are but two points behind the Chicagos and six points behind Philadelphia. It looks as though Fielder Jones's team was on the slide. It will only take one more defeat to put them in fifth place. Three weeks ago they were enjoying the lead. Hard blow for the Windy City.

The coming series between the Champs and the Highlanders will settle everything. The Athletics will take care of the Bostons, while the Senators are playing the New Yorkers.

CHOSE SUICIDE TO DEATH BY SHOOTING.

New York Bookkeeper Killed Himself When Given His Choice of Being Slain or of Taking His Own Life

Special to the Sunday American.

New York, Sept. 10.—Given the choice of killing himself or being killed by the enraged brother of a deserted woman, Claus Michaels, a bookkeeper living with his wife at No. 099 Tenth avenue, chose suicide, and yesterday afternoon shot and killed himself while the enraged brother was standing at the door.

In explaining the reasons for the tragedy, Mrs. Michaels told this story:

"My husband and I have been married ten years. We always lived happily until last year, when he began to neglect me and remain away from home. Finally he left me and I did not see him until last week. Then he confessed to me that he had fallen in love with a pretty stenographer.

Promised Forgiveness.

"I told him that if he would return to me and live as he did before he met this woman I would forgive him. He promised to quit the woman, and did come back to me.

"Last Tuesday we moved into apartments here, and were again happy until the brother of the stenographer suddenly came to the house.

"My husband and I were sitting in the parlor when the bell rang. Not suspecting anything, I answered the ring, and was surprised to see this fireman at the door. I had no sooner told him that Mr. Michaels was in than he tried to force his way past me, and shouted at the top of his voice.

"Shoot Yourself."

"'Michaels, have you finished that job yet? Have you shot yourself? If you don't do it I will.'

"I struggled with the man to keep him from entering the house. Then I heard a shot in the parlor. Forgetting everything else but my husband, I rushed into him and found him still conscious, but suffering greatly.

"All that he could tell me was that if he had not killed himself the fireman would have done so."

Special to the Boston American.

Providence, R. I., Sept. 10.—Fire which called all the apparatus in the central part of the city at 4.15 this afternoon was extinguished after two hours' battle with a loss of about $50,000. The blaze started on the second floor of Redford's four-story planing mill on Ship and Dyer streets and was confined to the mill.

Mr. Redford said the machinery on two floors was badly damaged but he could form no estimate of his loss which is covered by insurance.

BEALS WRIGHT WINS BIG TENNIS MATCH

Cincinnati, Ohio, Sept. 10.—The tri-State tennis tournament came to a close here to-day. In the men's single Beals Wright, of Boston, met L. H. Waidner, the Northwest champion, from Chicago. Wright clearly outplayed Waidner and won in straight sets, 7-5, 6-4, 6-[illegible].

By his victory Wright wins not only the championship of Ohio and Kentucky, but also gains a leg on the Governor's bowl, three of which gives the [illegible] permanent ownership. [illegible] has two legs and Kreigh Collins [illegible] one. Collins would have played Wright to-day, but is sick and unable to play, so that Wright got a leg on the bowl by default.

Massachusetts Troops Participate in the [illegible] Praised for [illegible] in Passing General Chaffee and the Governor

By Frank T. Pope.
Special Staff Correspondent of the Boston American.

WELLINGTON, Va., Sept. 10.—There was an outbreak of something very like [illegible] in the Eighth Massachusetts Regiment [illegible]

[illegible]

Reviewed by General Chaffee

All in all the review was a success. General Chaffee, chief of the general staff, was the reviewing officer. The review was originally set for 10 o'clock, then the hour was changed to 11.30 and later to 1 o'clock. It was a few minutes past that hour when it started.

General Grant, commanding the First Division, [illegible] As the general rode up to the grand stand he was heartily applauded by the crowd that had gathered [illegible] from Washington, and Mrs. Corbin, Mrs. Grant and [illegible] guests who came from Gainesville in automobiles.

The first division marched from Camp No. 1 at Manassas and arrived on the field about 12:30, and the second division was only a few minutes behind. Despite the action of the two companies of the Eighth Regiment, the Ninth, which had fully as much work on Friday as the Eighth, turned out its full strength, twelve companies.

Governor Bates With Corbin.

General Chaffee rode on to the field with General Corbin and his staff, receiving a salute from a battery as he appeared. Riding with General Corbin's staff was Governor John L. Bates, of Massachusetts. The Governor had abandoned the tall hat and frock coat that he wore when he appeared at Gainesville yesterday, and was attired in a cutaway coat and soft white felt hat that he had borrowed at General Corbin's headquarters. [illegible] up with the Fifth Regiment and Lieutenant Colonels Gihon and Perrins rode down with the Eighth and Ninth.

Just before General Chaffee rode on to the field General Bell, commander of the Second Division, [illegible], accompanied by his brigade commanders, inspected his division and was loudly cheered by his men. In the reviewing party were also Secretary of the Navy Paul Morton, and Mrs. John A. Logan and a party of friends. General Corbin and his staff led the line and turned out as they passed the reviewing officer, taking their places in the reviewing line. Following the staff came the signal corps, then a detachment of the Fifth regulars, and behind them General Whit's brigade, of which was the Fifth Massachusetts. The Fifth made a fine appearance as they swung past the reviewing officer with Colonel Oakes and his staff at the head. Every line was good, the regiment passing in line of companies, and few militia regiments on the field could compare with it for marching.

Compared Well with Regulars.

Following the four brigades of infantry came Artillery A, of Boston, being the second battery in line. The clean lines and smartness of the battery was noticeable, even when compared with the regulars. The guns and caissons were clean and the men looked a little better and cleaner than the average artillery troops.

In the Second Brigade of the Second Division was the Eighth Regiment, led by Colonel Pew. The regiment made a fine appearance, and had it not been for the diminished size of the Third Battalion it would have left nothing to be desired. In the Third Brigade was the Ninth, led by Colonel Donovan, and this regiment, too, marched past like a command of regulars. Distances were good, and there were no breaks in the lines.

Immediately after the review the Eighth and Ninth regiments marched to Wellington station, a mile from the field, there to take the train for home. The Eighth and Battery started back to Camp No. 1 at Manassas to be paid off and entrain. The Eighth and Ninth were paid off yesterday. Owing to the poor facilities at Wellington for entraining troops, it was late before the two regiments got away. They are expected to run ahead of the Fifth and the Battery, but all the commands should arrive in Boston sometime Sunday night.

Weak Places Pointed Out.

Except for the unpleasantness in the Eighth to-day the Massachusetts troops have been a credit to the State. Captain Parker, of course, feels badly over the capture of his battery by the Seventh Cavalry on Friday, but it must be said that had his infantry support stood by the battery and not retreated at the first sight of the cavalry, the battery probably would not have been captured.

If the manoeuvres, as has been claimed, were for the purpose of pointing out the weak places in the militia system, they were successful. They have shown some very pleasant things and some very unpleasant ones. One of the pleasant ones was the attitude of the regular army officers towards the militia officers. The regulars seem to have come to the belief that the strength of the country in time of war would be in the militia, not in the regular army, and they are willing, and even anxious, to do all in their power to place the militia on a higher standard of efficiency.

JOHN E. REDMOND'S MESSAGE TO NEW ENGLAND IRISHMEN

By Hon. John E. Redmond.

To the sturdy Irish sons of New England, who still have a love for their native soil, we owe a debt of gratitude which we can never repay. It is to them we look for help in the hour of our need, and they are the noble men and women who come to our side when the call for aid goes forth.

In all that we have done or hope to do we want your words of encouragement and your moral support. Your generosity is indicative of the great love you have for the noble cause for which we are all striving, and without it I can truly say that we cannot expect to accomplish the one great purpose for which we are all banded together, and for which we will fight until the last breath leaves our body.

SENATOR HOAR IS SLOWLY SINKING.

Venerable Statesman Passes the Day in Semi-Conscious Condition—His Physician Says There Is No Hope

Special to the Sunday American.

Worcester, Sept. 10.—Dr. Warren R. Gilman, Senator George F. Hoar's attending physician, says there is absolutely no chance for the patient's recovery. Hot stimulants are given regularly, but there is no gain in strength, and the Senator is gradually wearing away. He is weaker to-night than at any time since his last sickness. His mind is perfectly clear, and members of the family still have slight hope that he may pull through.

The Senator lay in a semi-conscious condition last night. That has been his condition for the past three days. Many of the venerable statesman's friends called to-day to inquire about his condition and messages continued to arrive inquiring solicitously about the sick man as they have since he was taken ill.

The bulletin issued last night was not of a character to afford the Senator's friends and the members of his family much comfort. It was as follows:

"The Senator passed most of the day in sleep. He is in a condition of semi coma, but appears all right when aroused. In this respect there is practically no change in his condition. There has not been the slightest gain in strength at any time and if anything he is perceptibly weaker."

CHANDLER EGAN WINS AMATEUR GOLF HONORS

Harvard Man Beats Herreshoff in the Final Round on Baltusroe Links.

Special to the Sunday American.

Short Hills, N. J., Sept. 10.—Chandler Egan this afternoon won the national amateur golf championship by defeating Frederick Herreshoff 8 up and 6 to go on the Baltusrol Club links. Egan is the Western amateur champion, while Herreshoff is champion of Vermont. Egan has also been intercollegiate champion. He is a leading Harvard player and a member of the Exmoor Club, Chicago, while Herreshoff belongs to the Ekwanok, and Garden City, L. I. clubs, entering from the former.

The gallery was the largest that has followed a golf contest around New York for two years or more, but the play was decidedly uninteresting. Cards:

Egan had a bad start in the morning, but managed to square the match at the end of the sixth hole, and from that point practically had Herreshoff at his mercy. Paris, Sept. 10.—The rule of the American War Department that during manoeuvres officers of the army must appear each day at gala dinner in full dress uniform has created much merriment here, and is taken to prove the general opinion that Americans are, to use a mild expression, very eccentric.

One paper remarks that the new custom, if carried out also in case of a real war, may be of civilizing influence, and says that the battles would probably be less bloody and the cruelties committed fewer if each officer at the end of a battle had to dress up in full gala and submit to the charming and refining influence of beautiful ladies in evening dress, and adds that still better results might be reached if officers of both sides could arrange to meet at a dinner party every day after the day's battle had been fought.

Another paper, which takes a more serious view, says: "This order, one of the most ridiculous we have ever heard of, again shows how our brethren across the ocean are drifting away more and more from the simple republican ideals of their forefathers.

Longing for Royalty.

"Though the United States, of course, still formally retains the forms of a republic it becomes daily more evident that among certain [illegible], the moneyed aristocrats, who practically govern the country, there is a strong desire for the splendor of a royal [illegible] and as this, of course, is out of the question, they go as close to it as they dare.

London, Sept. 10.—Jan Kubelik, the violinist, is considering an offer of $200,000 and his expenses for a tour of the United States of 100 nights.

He is considering the stipulation that he be accompanied by the twin girls that were born in June.

The violinist likes the idea of the $200,000, but he will be influenced by the condition that the twins accompany him. He is so devoted to them that he would not leave them behind.

The violinist was married to Countess Marianne von Csaky Szell, August 25, 1903, at Debreczin, Hungary. His bride was the niece of the former Premier of Hungary, [illegible] von Szell.

It was a love match, pure and simple. In 1900, while Kubelik was playing at a concert in Debreczin, the Prime Minister and his niece sat in a box in the audience. She was the widow of an officer in the Royal Infantry. It was a case of love at first sight and Kubelik and the Countess met at the Prime Minister's palace, and, though the great Csaky family [illegible] to the violinist's attentions, the two young people remained so faithful to each other that their devotion conquered and their engagement was soon formally sanctioned.

WOMEN COPYING MEN'S EVIL CUSTOMS.

HUNTING, FOR INSTANCE, IS AN INDELICATE SPORT

By Lady Henry Somerset.

London, Sept. 10.—There is a growing tendency, which is to be much commended, of breaking down the custom which has hitherto divided the sexes, women's clubs and men's clubs, women's societies and men's societies. I look forward to the coming years as likely to bring the interests of men and women into line.

The Woman's Club is now an established fact, but in almost every club women are permitted to bring their men acquaintances to dinner or to lunch; but hitherto the doors of the men's clubs have been closed against women.

Now I believe that in the future this will not be the case, that women will be received at men's clubs on the same footing that men are now received in theirs. The societies, the philanthropists, the clubs of the future will, I hope, be managed by men and women alike, for only so will the interests of the race be really met, although the division which has hitherto existed has surely been educational.

Reasons for Regret.

Nevertheless I regret to see that woman is adopting certain phases of man's life from which I think she would do well to stand aside.

After a long succession of gayeties in London, followed by yachting at Cowes and racing at Goodwood, the fashionable English woman has gone to the moors, and is grouse shooting and deer stalking with men. The Duchess of Bedford is one of the most notable shots. The Duchess of Newcastle has killed big game with the Duke in the Rockies, when she crossed the water.

The Marchioness of Breadalbane is well known as a rifle shot and deer stalker, and neither cold, fog nor damp deter her. The King's daughters are also excellent shots, Princess Charles of Denmark notably the best, and Lady Constance Steward Richardson has a world wide fame, while the Countess of Warwick has won laurels in the field of sport.

Lady Hindlip, who was married this year, preferred to start on her honeymoon tour for big game hunting in Africa, and has gone with her husband up the country from Mombassa to Uganda, where she has done deeds of prowess.

Personally I can understand no pleasure in killing, nor do I believe that such sport adds to the delicacy, refinement and tenderness which to my old fashioned mind, would be the characteristics of the woman who is likely to influence the world for good.

Died for Child.

From time to time those who are pessimistic as to the existence of heroic qualities in this century are startled by heroism of which they had not dreamed.

On a [illegible] day a few weeks ago Lady Hilda MacNeil and [illegible] Pritchard went down to the river [illegible] to bathe. Miss Pritchard, a [illegible] and little [illegible] MacNeil, Lady Hilda's son, [illegible] the water, [illegible] party when they heard [illegible] the bay, and [illegible] out of the tent they saw Lady Hilda MacNeil and [illegible] struggling in deep, rough water.

It was evident that the boy had gone farther than he intended, and Lady Hilda, seeing his danger, although a poor swimmer, had thrown herself into the current to endeavor to save the child.

Little May did not, however, lose her presence of [illegible] fasten the [illegible] that was [illegible] towels to a stick, [illegible] in the hopes of reaching [illegible] drowning wom[illegible] both turned over [illegible] and the boy were carried out by [illegible]

The girl then ran to a field three quarters of a mile away, where Mr. MacNeil was playing [illegible] and when [illegible] reached [illegible] the [illegible] body had been wa[illegible] to the shore, but Lady Hilda had disappeared, and it was three hours before her body was found [illegible] below the spot where [illegible]

Lady Hilda [illegible] years of [illegible] and was deeply beloved by all who knew her [illegible] rich and poor, when they heard how the heroic woman had met her death.

Alcohol's Victims.

In numberless railway stations a [illegible] cent fountain has found a place. I have always [illegible] placed in the [illegible] and [illegible] are [illegible] but the [illegible] has laid bare [illegible] pale face [illegible]

It is stated that [illegible] of these machines [illegible] these perfumes [illegible] than in brandy. Some [illegible] to state what [illegible] they prefer [illegible]

When the machine is slightly out of order scent can be obtained by suction, without the addition of a coin. It is known to those who study alcoholics in [illegible] that many women are [illegible] the [illegible] taste [illegible] the [illegible] addition to strong drink runs in a vicious circle, for the habit is playing havoc with young constitutions as well as the worn [illegible] pleasure seekers of the privileged classes.

Czarewitch's Christening.

At the moment when Port Arthur is crumbling under the Japanese assault, and the last act of the great tragedy is approaching, his imperial highness, the Czarewitch, dressed in robes of pale blue and lying on a cushion, was baptized according to the rites of the Eastern Church, by the Metropolitan of St. Petersburg.

The scene was one of gorgeous splendor. The gold embroidered uniforms of men, the diamond [illegible] head-dresses of the women, the splendid robes of the members of the Holy Synod, the foreign ambassadors, the generals and admirals and the civil authorities formed a living kaleidoscope of color, and after the ceremony of immersion had been performed on the crying infant, he was invested with the insignia of the Order of St. Andrew, and the ringing of church bells and the firing of salutes from the three hundred and one guns at Peterhof told the inhabitants of St. Petersburg that the heir of all the Russias had sworn to be Christ's faithful follower and servant to his life's end."

In the great galleries of the palace hang 863 portraits executed by Rotari for Katherine II., in memory of her progress through the fifty provinces of Russia.

There also are the immense pictures of the naval victories by Orloff. These must, I think, sometimes bring thoughts of sadness to the mind of Nicholas II as he passes through the endless corridors, weighed down by the anxiety of the disasters in the Far East.

London, Sept. 10.—The one-armed tennis player from New Zealand, Miss Hilda Hitchings, has been attracting considerable attention in social and athletic circles by her wonderful playing. Miss Hitchings comes from Napier, New Zealand, and was born with only one arm, and that the left. Several years ago, in spite of her physical handicap, she won the women's championship of New Zealand and held for a year the silver cup presented by Salzenger & Sons, London.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

Paris, Sept. 10.—Fashionable Dinard had been looking forward for weeks to the ball given at Monplaisir, and which in every way exceeded even the most enthusiastic hopes of those by whom it was organized. The feature of the ball was a series of special dances, and these had been rehearsed at the Casino until the dancers were able to execute them with all the ease of professional dancers.

The ballroom and attendant salons were crowded with the most representative gathering of feminine beauty which has ever been seen at Dinard.

The first dance was a minuet, in which Mrs. Duncan Elliot, Miss Alexander, Miss Morgan Hill, Miss Hoy, Miss Cochrane, Miss Oliver, Miss Fitzgibbons and Mlle. des Frances took part.

The next feature was a Greek dance executed by Mrs. Hughes-Hallett, with eight attendant nymphs in white draperies bordered with gold, their hair bound with gold [illegible]. Mrs. Hughes-Hallett wore a white costume embroidered in gold, with a scarlet scarf flung over one shoulder. The nymphs were Mrs. Bennett, her sister, Miss [illegible], the Misses Ashmead Bartlett, Miss [illegible]wden, Miss Buchanan, Miss Maude and Miss Mackenzie.

RARE LACE STOLEN FROM AN ALTAR

Special Cable to Sunday American.

London, Sept. 10.—A singular act of sacrilege has occurred at St. Michael's Church, Chamberley, on the Southampton road.

It was discovered that someone had opened the iron gates of the chancel and ripped off the whole of an exquisite piece of Honiton lace from the altar cloth, which had been specially made as a memorial gift. Nothing else in the church had been disturbed. The lace was about four yards long and four inches wide.

London, Sept. 10.—Sir Hiram Maxim carried out some more aeroplane experiments at the Crystal Palace, and Metcalf Wood went up to a height of sixty feet on the machine, which attained a speed of eighty to one hundred miles an hour.

"The experiments," said Sir Hiram, "have shown that a well-made aeroplane placed at a slight angle from the horizontal and travelling at a high velocity has a much greater lifting effect than has ever been supposed."

"The sensation," said Mr. Wood, "was like travelling at terrific speed in a motor car, with the addition of feeling all the time the sensation of sharp bodily exercise."

He has already composed a symphony, a concerto for violin and numerous other pieces of importance, not to mention quantities of simple melodies of exquisite charm.

The subject of the opera, of which Carmen Sylva is writing the libretto, is "Joan of Arc." Young Florizel has received the following letter from the Queen of Roumania inviting him to come to her chateau at Neuweid on the Rhine to pursue his work:

REDMOND, IRISH LEADER, HERE

Those whom he did receive he treated with a courtesy which was charming, but he never grew verbose, and evidently is keeping his eloquence for to-night.

This reticence he explained when he told me that the interviewer is an unknown quantity in Ireland and that the Irish papers do not print interviews.

"I am delighted to be here again," he said, after a cordial handshake. "I have always been so well treated here, and I have so many friends that I feel especially at home in Boston."

Mr. Redmond has a shrewd but kindly face, [illegible] pleasant and decidedly pleasing.

"My visit has been far more successful than I anticipated," he told me. "It has even exceeded all my hopes. The Irish Americans all over the country seem to be standing loyally by the Irish cause."

Cause Grows Constantly.

"I was here two years ago, and since that time I find interest has been constantly growing."

"Then the Irish do not forget Ireland," I said, "even after they become so thoroughly engrossed in American affairs."

"No," he replied quickly, "I can truly say that the better American citizens they are, the better supporters they are of Ireland.

"We want to stop Irish emigration as much as we can. We want [illegible] Irishmen in Ireland to [illegible] Ireland strong."

"But not many [illegible] Irish Americans go back to live [illegible] country and help affairs along," I suggested.

"Not many go back to stay," he agreed. "They are going back all the time to visit. What we are striving for is to build up Irish lands and industries so that there will be no need for her sons and daughters to come away across the seas in order to gain prosperity."

"And what is your greatest wish for Ireland?"

He looked at me earnestly. "Self government," he said, "a government like—well, like the State of Massachusetts, for example, with our own parliament."

"But," I exclaimed, "that would make Ireland a republic!"

"Call it republican or monarchical or whatever you please," he said, "we want self [illegible]."

"Ireland was very nice to the King and Queen when they went visiting," I said.

They treated the King and Queen [illegible] as they would [illegible] Ireland does not care particularly for the King and Queen. She asks [illegible] strangers."

He arose, and his [illegible] toward [illegible].

"What [illegible] of American women?" [illegible] he said with [illegible] and American [illegible], as well [illegible].

[illegible] Mr. Redmond [illegible] are very different [illegible] what an Irish [illegible] seated [illegible] as they are [illegible] in America [illegible].

Mrs. Redmond and Miss Redmond spent the morning driving, and the latter part of the afternoon quietly seated in their [illegible] apartments, where Miss Marie [illegible] the [illegible] of the Mayor [illegible].

This is Mrs. Redmond's second visit to America, and she is delighted to renew the pleasant impressions previously formed. She is a young woman and very bright and vivacious. Like her stepdaughter she has the fresh healthy complexion of the typical [illegible] Irish woman, and most expressive [illegible] eyes.

Miss Esther Redmond, who is not more than eighteen and only recently out of school, has never before been in America. She is simply bubbling over with enthusiasm. In fact she is having the time of her life, and nothing escapes her observation.

All her leisure time yesterday she spent in writing to her friends at home, giving them vivid and amusing descriptions of her [illegible] experiences in Boston, which she [illegible].

Miss Esther Redmond is a strikingly pretty [illegible] has a [illegible] of dark brown hair, great violet eyes with fringing lashes and a [illegible] with [illegible] covering.

Both she and Mrs. Redmond dress very [illegible] in [illegible] tailor-made gowns, Miss Redmond's gown yesterday being of dark [illegible] cloth.

In the morning Mr. Redmond, with the Rt. Rev. Mgr. Denis O'Callaghan, D. D., of South Boston, and Thomas B. Fitzpatrick, National Treasurer of the United Irish League of America, paid a visit to his grace, Archbishop Williams.

The call was a matter of much pleasure to [illegible] for Archbishop Williams is not only well versed in all affairs vitally affecting Ireland, but he is deeply interested. Quite unsolicited he proved his interest by contributing $100.

From the archiepiscopal residence Mr. Redmond and his escort went to South Boston, where they had a chat [illegible] on Bishop Brady, who has made for many years a close study of the Irish question in America, and who, besides his verbal interest, gave $50 to the fund.

Informal Luncheon.

Returning to the hotel Mr. Michael P. Curran, private secretary to Mayor Patrick Collins, gave an informal luncheon, "a strictly family affair," he called it, on behalf of the Mayor, who was not in town.

There were twelve covers, and the table was effectively done in carnations and roses.

Mrs. Redmond and Miss Redmond were the only ladies present.

Among the members of the Redmond party Captain A. J. C. Donelan, M. P., and Patrick O'Brien, M. P., furnished a striking contrast in appearance.

Captain Donelan is tall, broad shouldered and as military in bearing as [illegible] a former member of the British army knows how to be.

His stature is not in the least impressive, but no one who looks at his splendidly shaped head, and his strongly featured face, could fail to doubt either his ability or his earnestness.

This morning, in their devotions the party will be separated. With Mr. and Mrs. T. B. Fitzpatrick Mr. and Mrs. Redmond, Miss Redmond and Mr. O'Brien will attend [illegible] at the Church of the Immaculate Conception.

Captain Donelan will attend service at Trinity.

In the afternoon Mrs. Redmond and Miss Redmond will make a call at the home of Mayor Collins.

The demand for tickets has grown to unexpected proportions, and the attendance will undoubtedly bring out the "S. R. O." signs.

In one of the boxes will be Mrs. Redmond, Miss Redmond, probably Mrs. Fitzpatrick, Miss Collins and several other ladies. All the various Irish organizations in the city and its suburbs have put forth every effort toward making it a success.

Mr. Redmond is not having many idle moments on American soil. Lawrence and Lowell will be visited to-morrow and next day, and from Boston he goes to Pittsburg, St. Louis, Chicago, and then to Canada, returning to New York, and sailing for home on Oct. 5.

During that tour it is his hope, and the hope seems certain of fulfillment, that he shall have spread effectively the cause of the United Irish League in America, arousing interest and gaining general aid to the great work he has at heart.

KING CALLS THE PLAN FOR A GARDEN A BLOTCH.

London, Sept. 10.—King Edward gave [illegible] of Works [illegible] a swift retort when [illegible] the [illegible] to be made at Buckingham [illegible] during his present stay at Marienbad.

The question arose as to what was to be done with the circular space at the head of the [illegible] waiting for the reception of Mr. Brock's great mass of statuary which [illegible] principal feature of the Queen Victoria Memorial.

"Certainly not," replied the King, "from my palace windows to look down at a blotch of variegated blooms there would be like gazing at a porus plaster."

The abashed official was ordered to keep the space filled with trim young evergreens, and these will occupy the spot until the statue of Queen Victoria is ready.

Chick Stahl is now playing better than ever for the Champs. Earlier in the season, he was not hitting as well as he has in former years, but lately he has picked up wonderfully, and is now swatting the ball to a merry tune. In the outfield, he can't be beaten. He has been so long in the game he knows the tricks of most of the batters, and doesn't have any trouble judging where they'll hit the ball. Chick played with the local National team before the organization of the American League, and previously with Buffalo.

San Francisco, Cal., Sept. 10.—There is very little chance of Sandy Ferguson, of Chelsea, Mass., getting on a match with Champion Jeffries till he has added to his reputation as a fighter. This is what Jeff has to say in regard to the Bay State man's challenge:

"It is not what does the Champion say, but what does the public say. San Francisco is the only place to hold championship fights and all the sporting men here seem to think that Ferguson is a very poor excuse for a heavyweight. It would be a loss of time and money for me to bother with him while present opinion prevails."

ED McNICHOL OF THE BOSTON NATIONAL TWIRLING STAFF.

In this picture, Ed McNichol, of the Boston Nationals, is seen, just after he has delivered one of his delusive balls to the wily batter. Mac was picked up by the far-seeing Manager Buckenberger down in Wheeling, West Virginia. During his first two or three stunts on the firing line, he was plainly nervous, and lost games through his erraticness. He has been pretty steady lately, and has managed to make a fairly good showing. It is expected that next season McNichol will be a more important factor when he goes to the box.

STALWART LANDS RICH TURF PRIZE

E. R. Thomas's Runner First in the Annual Champion Stakes at Sheepshead Track.

Special to the Sunday American.

New York, Sept. 10.—E. R. Thomas's three year old Stalwart galloped home four lengths in the lead at the end of the $25,000 Annual Champion Stakes, at two miles and a quarter, at Sheepshead Bay. Major Daingerfield, the erratic, took a notion to try a bit, and beat out Broomstick for the [illegible] Fitzet [illegible] bringing up the rear [illegible] was Africander, last year's [illegible]

Broomstick was a hot [illegible] choice, going at odds on, with Stalwart well supported by his owner at 8 to 5. Africander was played down to 8 from 12, while the Major, because of his recent refusals to do his best, was neglected at 12 to 1.

Broomstick made the running for a mile and a half, with Stalwart at his flanks going easily, while Africander and Major Daingerfield, a length apart, were twelve lengths behind. Coming into the stretch Stalwart shot ahead of the weary Broomstick, and Daingerfield, with a tremendous spurt, shook Africander. Indeed, the feature of the finish was the sudden speed of the black four-year-old, as Stalwart, increasing his lead to four lengths, won with great ease. Major Daingerfield closed up the gap between him and Broomstick, and in a driving finish beat out Captain Brown's sturdy colt by a neck.

The great Eastern Handicap went to Paget's Tradition which despite her heavy impost of 128 pounds, finished first with ease two lengths ahead of Duryea's Sandria, which in turn was a head in front of Sandford's Burnt Hills. Tradition was only a lukewarm favorite, her price receding from 8 to 5 to 11 to 5, the bulk of the public money going on Burnt Hills [illegible] price dropped from 8 at the opening to 13 to 5. The results:

FIRST RACE—The Westbury steeplechase; handicap for four-year-olds and upwards, about two and one-half miles. Good and Plenty, 159 (Ray), 4 to 5 and 2 to 5, won; The Ragged Cavalier, 147 (Finnegan), 20 to 1 and 6 to 1, second; Daffodowndilly, 137 (Roberts), 6 to 1 and 2 to 1, third. Time—5:09. Zinziber, Bonfire and Levator also ran.

SECOND RACE—Six furlongs: Handzarra, 91 (Knox), 11 to 10 and 2 to 5, won; Shotgun, 123 (Odom), 8 to 1 and 2 to 1, second; Flyingship, 115, [illegible] 6 to 1 and 7 to 5, third. Time—1.13 1-5. Reliable, Miss Jordan, Tol San, Habenstein also ran.

THIRD RACE—The Great Eastern Handicap for two-year-olds, six furlongs, F. C.—Tradition, 128 (Lyne), 11 to 5 and even, won; Sandria, 100 (Shaw), 20 to 1 and 8 to 1, second; Burnt Hills, 113 [illegible] 13 to 5 and even, third. Time [illegible] Lark, Jack Lory [illegible] Wild Mint, Broadcloth [illegible] Flyback and Maximilian also ran.

FOURTH RACE—The Annual Champion, for three-year-olds and upward [illegible] 2¼ miles—Stalwart [illegible] 5 and [illegible] Major Daingerfield [illegible] 12 to 1 and 3 to 1, second; Broomstick, 117 (Burns), 9 to 10 and 1 to 3, third. Africander also ran. Time, 3.54 3-5.

FIFTH RACE—For two-year-olds, selling, 5½ furlongs, F. C.—Tearess, 105 (Hildebrand), even and 2 to 5, won [illegible] Park [illegible] King [illegible] H. L. Johnson, Belligerent, Istria and Charadella also ran.

SIXTH RACE—Handicap for three-year-olds and upwards, 1⅛ miles on turf. Flaxon, 107 (Redfern), 16 to 5 and 6 to 5, won; Ed Tierney, 108 (Hildebrand), 5 to 1 and 2 to 1, second; Prince Ching, 111 (Burns), 9 to 2 and 8 to 5, third. Time, 1.54. Leader, Sheriff Bell and Sonoma Belle also ran.

YACHTS START ON THEIR LONG RACE

Sandy Hook, N. J., Sept. 10.—For the first time in nineteen years the ocean race for the Cape May Cup was sailed in American waters to-day. The contestants are Wilson Marshall's auxiliary three-masted schooner Atlantic, the auxiliary schooner Vergemere, owned by Vice Commodore A. C. Bostwick of the Larchmont Yacht Club, and the schooner Endymion, owned by Commodore George F. Lauder, Jr., of the Indian Harbor Yacht Club.

The preparatory signal was made at 12:56, the starting signal at 1:14, and under lower and top sails the yachts crossed the line in the following order: Vergemere, 1 22 45, Atlantic, 1 27. The Endymion was caught by the ebb tide on the wrong side of the starting line and was handicapped badly, crossing the line at 1 48.

The Vergemere, after crossing the line, lowered her maintopsail and maintopmast staysail and came about, but soon thereafter went on her course again. The Atlantic had meanwhile taken the lead and stood toward the open ocean in a southerly course.

The boats will sail to the lightship off Cape May and back.

MARRIED to MYSTERY

Boston American's Thrilling Story of Present-Day Life in Boston

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters.

Esther Vassell, a poor girl supporting an invalid sister, is induced by a strange woman named Lilian to consent to being secretly married for a large sum of money.

The ceremony takes place in a ruined church on an estate called Adderly in a dense wood. On her return home she finds her sister and uncle both dead, the latter leaving her sole heir to a large fortune. He disinherited his son, Guy Hocking. Esther discovers that Lilian is Guy's wife. Esther's lawyer takes her to visit her late uncle's estate, where she is to live. They are invited to lunch at the Borradales, their neighbors. Esther and Harold Borradale become great friends. Guy Hocking returns to his old habits and arranges to borrow money from a loan shark, being trapped into thinking he is fleecing the man. He can inherit the money only if Esther dies unmarried. The shark puts the Slugger on Esther's trail. Harold tells Esther of his love and asks her to marry him. She confesses her love, but tells him she cannot. The Slugger is discovered by Harold, who pursues him and is stabbed by him, but knocks his man senseless. Esther determines to learn whether or not she is legally married and seeks Lilian at Adderley. She follows Lilian and is locked in the Borradale tomb. Esther finds the body of the man she married sitting coffinless in the tomb. She is released at daybreak and tells her story. Esther returns home to find that her maid, wearing her clothes, has been murdered. The shock makes her ill. She recovers and tells her story to Guy Hocking and determines to tell Harold. Harold announces his engagement to Esther and Probyn, the minister tells them the marriage is impossible. Mrs. Borradale breaks down and tells Esther she is under the Borradale curse. Guy Hocking confesses his fault and blames himself for the attempts to kill Esther.

Chapter xxxix.

He Is Dead!

"I CAN live now only to atone," muttered Guy Hocking.

Guy returned to Boston that same afternoon.

He was a broken man, and though Ester had spoken kind words to him at parting, even these had been insufficient to restore his self-respect.

Edgar Swan had not minced words with Guy. "You have been a fool, Hocking, as big a fool as walks the earth," he had said. "Did you think it possible that any one would lend you money on terms such as you seem to have flattered yourself you got? You fancied you were dealing with a money-eyed idiot who did not care how he threw his cash about. You believed what Moncrief told you—Moncrief, a rascal only a little behind Goldsmith in villainy, and who had swindled more young men out of their cash than any other shark of his kind in Boston. We've got to let these blackguards know that we have found out their plot; that will keep them quiet for a time at least. But I don't see what actual security there will be for Miss Vassell till the money is paid. And you've no means of doing that, I suppose?"

Guy groaned. "One hundred thousand dollars I've had," he said, "and there's not much of it left. That fellow Blake and his confounded newspaper! The money has been just frittered away, and there's nothing to show for it—nothing!"

"Well, you may depend upon it Goldsmith will get his pound of flesh somehow—now or later. I know that it's a cheering thing to say, Hocking, but it's a fact, and you've got to face facts. In the meanwhile you had better hurry to Milton and prevent your cousin telling all she knows about Adderley to Mrs. Borradale. There's a far deeper-seated mystery there, and from what I can learn it all reflects back on her—though she's innocent enough of any real evil intent, poor old lady. I'll find out more in my own time—who the fellow was to whom Miss Vassell was married, and if he really is dead—but for the present what you have to do is to warn her against speaking to her fiance and his mother—and at the same time to tell her what an idiot you have made of yourself."

This was the conversation which had led to Guy Hocking's hasty visit to Esther when, as usual, he had arrived too late.

Before leaving Guy had been forced to undergo a very unpleasant scene with Esther and her lover. He had told, without reservation, the full story of his folly.

"I throw myself upon your pity, Esther," he said, woefully. "I have not a word to say in my own defence—except that to involve you in any way was the last thought in my mind. If I hadn't had the money—but I've had it and squandered the best part of it. Oh, why do I go on living when my life is such a valueless thing? I'm a curse to myself and every one." He writhed on his chair in impotent remorse.

"And in the meanwhile," said Harold, coldly, "in consequence of what you have done, Esther's life is not safe, for it is only by her death that your blackguard friends can expect to be paid."

"Oh, don't, Harold," interrupted Esther, "don't be hard. We must pay the money at once. It is not so very much."

"You may be quite certain that we shall find it very much when we come to investigate it," said Harold. He turned to Guy. "Don't you know the terms for repayment which you made? You signed a contract, I presume?"

Guy had to admit that he knew nothing about it. He had signed without reading. He added hastily that he had objected to the introduction of Esther's name, but it had been pointed out that the clause was merely formal.

"Oh, you fool, you fool!" exclaimed Harold, and Guy, in his misery, showed no resentment.

It was arranged that Guy was to go straight to Boston and visit the money-lender. He was to see his contract, and find out exactly how much must be paid to clear off his debt at once.

"I told you, Guy," said Esther, gently, "that you should have half my fortune. It is yours when you please to take it. The money means so little to me."

"I vowed," he said, with something like a sob in his throat, "that I would take no more money from you. And now I am forced to do it, because there is no other way to protect you. What a failure I am—what a miserable, abject failure!"

He looked so deplorably wretched that even Harlod felt sorry for him and spoke more kindly. And soon it was time for Guy to go and for Harold and Esther to return to the side of the striken old lady.

The local doctor had been hurriedly sent for, and by his advice a telegram had been sent to one of the leading physicians in Boston. There was no doubt that Mrs Borradale had been struck down by paralysis. It was pitiful to see her attempts at speech.

"She wishes to say something which is on her mind," said the doctor, gravely; "we must try and procure her rest."

"Do you anticipate—immediate danger?" asked Harold, anxiously. He was in deep trouble, and he blamed himself for the harsh words he had spoken to his mother. Had they been the primary cause of her attack? If so, he would never forgive himself—never.

The doctor would give no definite opinion. "We must wait a little while," he said. "When Dr. Willoughby comes we will hold a conference." With which statement Harold had to be contented.

It was evening when Guy reached town, and he feared that he might find the money-lender's office closed. He was determined to find the man or his assistant that night and clear up, at least, the point as to his indebtedness. The chief difficulty he felt was that in his rage he was most likely to betray his knowledge of the whole plot, and he had been warned not to do this.

He alighted from his cab at the money-lender's office. Guy hurried up the stairs to the first floor, where he knew the rooms were situated. The name of "Macgregor, commission agent," appeared on a plate. Somehow, he had never noticed this before, though Macgregor was Goldsmith's well-known alias.

"The place smells of usury," he muttered, "and I never saw through it. Thought that these rooms belonged to Epstone, a young man about town. Was ever such a fool, such an ass?"

He rang the bell violently, but there was no answer. It was as he thought—the office was shut for the night. Yet Goldsmith was reputed to live on the premises and to go out but seldom. He rang at the bell a second time.

"Hullo, Hocking! You?"

He turned at the sound of a familiar voice. It was Epstone, who had just mounted the stairs and stood behind him.

"What's the business?" asked Epstone with his accustomed drawl. "I can't let you in my rooms this evening, for I've got a private matter on hand. Can't you look me up to-morrow?"

"Your rooms, you cur!" said Hocking, savagely between his teeth. It was as he had told himself; he could not restrain his tongue. He pointed with shaking finger at the brass plate.

"Macgregor—commission agent—that is, Goldsmith, the shark," he stammered.

"Oh, is that all?" lisped Epstone, fixing his glass more firmly in his eye. "Didn't you know that I let rooms to Goldsmith for occasional use? I've never concealed the fact from you."

"It is a lie," cried Guy angrily. "The rooms are his, the place is his; you're his—his thing—his dog—a mean, sneaking cur. I know all about you and your dirty work."

Epstone made a pretence of losing his temper. "You think you're clever, don't you?" he snarled, "but I should like to know what the devil you have to complain of? You've got you're money. What more do you want?"

Hocking gripped him by the shoulder. "Look here, Epstone, I've half a mind to thrash you soundly here on the doorstep of your employer's rooms. I would if you were not such a pitiful specimen of humanity and if I didn't know that you've been acting on instructions from that arch scoundrel within. But you'll just do as I tell you if you want to save your skin. See?"

The younger man turned very white. He saw that he was no match for Hocking. Besides, in his heart he loathed the part he played, and was not prepared to take vigorous measures in Goldsmith's defence.

"What do you want me to do?" he asked shortly.

"Can you open this door so that we may talk inside?"

"Yes—but the old man is somewhere about the place."

"I don't care a bang. I'll tackle Goldsmith, too. I'm in the humor for it."

"Better not," said the other timorously. "He's a nut, you know, Hocking, if you tackle him it's ten to one that you come off second best. What's the trouble?"

"Open the door and I'll tell you."

Epstone obeyed. Together they entered the room where Guy's borrowing transaction had been carried through. He had seen it many times since then, and had always wondered at Epstone's peculiar taste in decoration.

"And I didn't recognize this for a usurer's den!" he muttered now. "God, what fool!"

Epstone looked nervously about him. He pointed to the folding door between the two rooms. "Goldsmith may be in his private office," he said. "If so, he will bear our voices. But I often see clients here alone, and he may not interrupt us. Now, what's wrong?"

"He is the actual lender of the money I had. I know he is, but I want to hear it from your lips."

"I was forced to it." Epstone spoke sullenly, but he did not resent the imputation.

"Well, do you know how Goldsmith expected to be repaid the money he lent me? Answer that." The look in Guy's eyes betokened danger.

Epstone was silent.

"Answer me, man—if you dare."

"I don't know," came the embarrassed reply. "I——"

"But you can guess?"

"Not even that. He has not taken me into his confidence. I was put up as the leader; that's all."

"He meant to have Miss Vassell murdered. He has made two attempts to do so. Now, what have you to say?"

The result of his words was unexpected, even to Guy. Epstone broke down. He rocked himself despairingly in his chair and weak tears came to his eyes.

"I hate him—I hate him," he moaned.

He poured forth the story of his own wrongs; he told of the ignominy of his position, of the crimes which he was bound to countenance. A little sorrow for the wretched youth stole into Guy's heart. Here was one who had fallen lower than himself.

"I guessed what he had in his mind," faltered Epstone, "but I could do nothing. I am bound hand and foot."

"Will you help me now?" asked Guy, mollified to softness, as was the way with him.

"What can I do? What do you propose?"

"First, I must see the contract. It must be paid off somehow at once. Can you get it?"

"Isaacson has it. It's in his desk in the next room."

"Well, let's look for it."

"But he may be there ——"

"If he is," cried Guy, "so much the better. I can tackle him at once. I mean to settle the matter."

Without a moment's hesitation he threw open the folding door. Epstone followed him nervously.

By the great desk, his back to them, sat Goldsmith. He was leaning forward, his head on his arms, which were extended at length upon the great blotting pad.

Hocking laid his hand on the money-lender's shoulder. There was no responsive movement.

"He's dead!" said Guy.

Chapter xl.

The Marks on the Throat.

"DEAD!" repeated Epstone aghast. Goldsmith lay with his arms sprawled across the desk.

"Yes, dead," repeated Guy, turning to Epstone, who stood just behind him gazing with dilated eyes over his shoulder at the inanimate form of his late master.

"What has been happening here?"

"He can't be dead—he's fallen in a fit or something of that sort," muttered Epstone. "I saw him only a couple of hours ago and he was well enough then—in a —— bad temper, too. He was rowing Morris over some papers."

"Morris," asked Guy quickly, "did you leave them together?" The thought occurred to him that Morris might have struck out in a fit of temper.

"Yes. Do you think? —— By Jove, it might be so. But say"—the young man's teeth were chattering—"are you sure he is dead?"

"Sure?" returned Guy contemptuously, "of course I'm sure. He's in no fit." He passed his hand beneath the body and felt for the beating of the heart. He had no fear of death when brought face to face with it in this manner. "Good heaven, you're not frightened man, are you?"

"I've never seen any one dead before," muttered Epstone. "It knocks me a bit silly. Don't you feel it?"

"Not I," returned Guy, "and what do I care for the life of such a creature as this? I've never seen him alive, but I should judge him worse then than as he is now. You ought to know."

Epstone shuddered. "Yes," he said. Then, after a moment's pause, "What killed him Hocking?"

"I'm blessed if I know," replied Guy, "and I'm not going to shift him to find out. It's enough that he's dead. We'll leave the rest to the police—whom we ought to send for at once."

"No, no," cried Epstone, with a nervous start. "I don't want to have anything to do with it. He'd have lain there without any one finding him till to-morrow if it hadn't been for you. Let's go away quietly without saying a word. What do you think?"

"I'm hanged if I do anything so foolish," replied Guy with emphasis. "I don't care to run the risk of being arrested on suspicion. There are people who know that I came up to see Goldsmith, and that I have no reason to love him. Things are bad enough as they stand. And you're just as likely to be suspected as I am." He turned upon his companion with a half laugh.

"Do you think so, Hocking? What an infernal nuisance." The words sounded weak and foolish. "What's to be done?" he added after a pause. "Let's go into the other room to think it out. I can't stand being in here—with that." He moved away, and Guy followed him. When they reached the front room Epstone carefully closed the door. He poured himself out a stiff glass of brandy and Guy followed his example.

"There's no getting over the fact that Goldsmith is dead, and that we are the first to discover it," said Guy as he sat down his tumbler. "Did any one see you come, Epstone?"

"Not a soul. In fact, I had no intention of returning," answered the young man; "but passing through the street on my way to the club I remembered something that I needed and came up for it—it was an incriminating letter that I was to use against a chap. Goldsmith had taken it from one of the safes to give me. Ah, here it is." As he spoke he had opened a desk and taken up a letter which lay on the top of a lot of manuscripts.

He was about to transfer the letter mechanically to his pocket when Guy interrupted him.

"Surely you won't use the vile thing now? Tear it up, man. That's what you've got to do."

"Tear it up?" repeated Epstone, as if hardly understanding. Guy snatched it from him and tore it into little pieces.

"That bit of blackmail's over anyway," he muttered. "Here, what shall I do with the bits? It won't do to leave freshly-torn paper about—might cause suspicion. Pity there's no fire." He stuffed the fragments into his pocket. "There, they won't be found."

Epstone was watching him with keen interest. His weak eyes were of a sudden transformed by the look of cunning which occasionally shot into them. He glanced at the closed door that divided the rooms and shut off death from life.

"What fools we are," he whispered hoarsely and hastily. "I could hardly believe the old rascal dead, or I should have thought of it sooner. Fetch the police! Not I—nor you; not yet, anyway."

"What do you mean?" asked Guy.

"Why, don't you see, Hocking? Here we are alone. There's not a soul in the house. Goldsmith kept no servant, and the whole place belongs to him. Down stairs there's a shop, but no one lives there, and it was shut up when you and I came in. No one saw us. There's no hurry about telling the police. And there's something of the utmost importance to you and to me that we can do now with the greatest ease. I mean to do it, too."

"What?" asked Guy, puzzled.

"There are papers of mine which Goldsmith held which gave him his grip on me. Do you think I'm going to let them pass into the hands of the police or any one else? Not I. Why, it's my chance to be free once and forever. Those checks—I told you—which I was foolish enough to forge, and which he bought up—I know where he keeps them, for he's shown them to me often enough. And the mortgage—my God, I'll have it, too!" His voice rose in his excitement till it was a cry of triumph. He had forgotten his fear of the dead man who lay sprawling upon his desk in the adjoining room.

New England Contracts for the Past Week Are $1,839,000, an Increase of $847,000 Over Those of Last Year

Most of the real estate dealers report a satisfactory opening of the Fall business in realty urban and suburban. The value of building contracts placed the past week showed a substantial increase over the total for the corresponding period last year, the aggregate throughout New England having been $1,839,000, as compared with $992,000 during the comparative period in 1903.

No. 360 Commonwealth avenue has been bought by James D. Robertson from A. J. Flint. The four-story stone and brick building and land is assessed on a valuation of $24,000.

$10,500 Sale.

Title to the property at No. 561 Massachusetts avenue has been passed by Harry E. Hasty to Florence B. Tilton. The four-story and basement brick dwelling and the 1,080 feet of land are assessed on a basis of $10,500.

Martin M. Lomasney and Daniel J. Kiley have taken title to No. 10 Dix place from John R. Murray. The parcel consists of a three and one-half story brick building and 1,550 feet of land assessed for $8,500.

A third interest in the property No. 2 Utica place has been conveyed by Daniel F. Falvey to Margaret Golding. The property, consisting of 1,017 feet of land and a three and one-half story brick dwelling, is valued at $6,000.

Bought Two Properties.

J. F. and William E. Clark have purchased from the trustees of the estate of Malachi Clark one property on Decatur street and another on Troy street. The former is assessed on a basis of $6,700 and the latter at the rate of $6,900.

Vacant land seems to have the call with Edward T. Harrington & Co. Sales have been made in the various suburbs.

These brokers report the sale for Frank E. Flood, of Lancaster, of his real estate located on Waltham street, just beyond Forest street, and adjoining the estate of Frank Peabody. There are about 10,000 feet of land. The purchaser was D. Goddard.

Sale in West Roxbury.

Edward T. Harrington & Co. have sold lots Nos. 160 and 161, Sanborn avenue, West Roxbury, containing 6,000 square feet each. The purchaser was Thomas F. Farrar, of Boston, who contemplates building upon the property. The price paid was $500 per lot.

The same house reports the sale for James Dewire of a lot of land located on Spruce street, Milton, containing 5,000 square feet. The purchaser, J. C. Rice, buys for improvement.

The sale of lots 898, 899, 900 and 901, containing 20,000 square feet of land, more or less, located on E and F streets, between Main and Central avenues, Nantasket, has been effected by these brokers. The purchaser was J. Marden, who intends to erect several cottages thereon.

To Develop Dow Estate.

Edward T. Harrington & Co. state they are to develop the well known "Dow" estate on Academy Hill, Woburn, bounded by Warren and Sturgis streets and Arlington and Dow roads. Advertisements giving full data will appear in these columns offering the entire estate at popular terms and popular prices. A sale of this kind was never attempted before. To sell the best piece of residential property on the best street in the heart of the city, and for the above firm to pledge themselves to sell every lot in one afternoon (weather permitting) would ordinarily be considered quite an undertaking.

For a term of years the estate No. 127 Egmont street, Brookline, has been leased to Lincoln C. Cummings through Broker George A. Dill.

Dorchester Transactions.

Among the late transactions in Dorchester has been the sale of the estate at No. 394 Centre street by Julia A. Worsley to Mellissa E. Rich, on private terms. The frame dwelling and 13,979 feet of land has a taxable value of $8,100.

In the same district John E. Willis has bought from Annie M. Dolan the estate No. 29 Raven street, comprising a dwelling and 22,144 feet of land, taxed on $4,700.

Through A. Wilbur Starrat & Co., Frank E. Hawkes has sold to Edward R. Gregory the estate at No. 20 Birch street, Dorchester, comprising a frame dwelling and 2,600 feet of land, taxed on $2,400.

Angell Street Sale.

IN LIQUORS MADE SO BY
CUSHING PROCESS
When you purchase liquors remember these Four Facts

1. All distilled liquors contain fusel oil.
2. Fusel oil is deadly poison.
3. A handsome label on a bottle does not remove that poison.
4. The "CUSHING PROCESS" does.

The Cushing Process makes liquor absolutely pure—Whiskeys and Gins, 50c., 75c., $1 and $1.50 full quart; brandies, 75c., $1 and $1.25 and $2 full quart; imported wines, 75c. to $1; Cal. wines, 25c. to 50c. per full quart; if you want to see how good a whiskey we sell for 50c. per quart, send us a trial order; send for price list; $1 orders delivered free within 10 miles; $5 orders anywhere in New England; no charge for jugs or bottles; goods securely packed in plain cases; all orders promptly filled; will send C. SCHOOL ATTENDANCE IN BOSTON PROPER

1901	82,168
1902	84,778
1903	86,796
1904 (estimated)	88,753

The public schools of Boston open tomorrow, Tuesday and Wednesday. It is estimated that about 90,000 pupils will present themselves at the doors of the schools of Boston proper for admission. Adding to this the pupils of the immediate neighborhood of the city it has been figured that the army of little folks will number about 200,000.

While in the city proper it is believed that adequate provisions has been made for the large army of school children, an investigation of the situation in the suburbs leads to the conclusion that the schools will be overcrowded for a time.

The school authorities are doing all in their power to alleviate the congestion that will follow the opening of the various schools.

In some places this congestion, it is alleged, is caused by petty squabbles among the officials of the towns and the schools. In others, money that should be devoted to schools has been diverted to commercial channels. In still others there is no money available to provide for additional quarters for the accommodation of the increasing population.

Better In Boston.

In Boston proper conditions have been helped by the erection of three new buildings and additions to two others. Three thousand extra seats are provided by this. In addition to this, temporary quarters have been arranged for, and 100 pupils will be provided with seats and desks.

The Jefferson Grammar School, on Heath street, Roxbury, will be one of the new schools which throws its doors open to the children of Boston for the first time on Wednesday. It is a fine building, containing nineteen rooms, including class rooms, manual training and cookery rooms. Edward P. Sherburne, formerly of the Lowell Grammar School, in Jamaica Plain, will be the principal.

New North End School.

Another school which will open for the first time on Wednesday is the Washington Grammar School, on Norman street, in the West End. This is one of the finest school buildings in the city, and will contain thirty rooms, with manual training and cookery rooms, a gymnasium and two shower baths, and will have an electric elevator. Walter L. Harrington, who was formerly a sub-master in the Frothingham District, Charlestown, has been chosen principal of this school.

On North Bennet street, in the Eliot district, North End, a new primary school containing twenty-one class rooms and a manual training room has been constructed during the past year, and will be ready to receive its first quota of children on Wednesday. It has been fitted up with the latest equipment and will a long-felt want in the very heart of the crowded North End district.

The Francis Parkman School, on Walk Hill street, Forest Hills, has had a four-room addition made to it during the Summer, which will be used for the first time Wednesday. This district was very crowded last year.

A new district to be known as the Blackinton district has been created in Orient Heights in the Emerson district. The principal will be Herbert L. Morse, formerly a sub-master in the Lyman district.

Men to Go to School.

For the first time in the history of Boston public schools, men will be allowed to attend the Boston Normal School. On Wednesday men graduates of colleges will be allowed to register at the Normal School and take the same courses which have been open in the past only to women.

It is expected that on Wednesday there will be a very large registration of men who will wish to take advantage of this new method.

The New Regime.

On Wednesday, with the opening of the schools for the year of 1904, there begins a new regime in the history of the public schools of this city.

For more than a quarter of a century Edwin P. Seaver held in his hands the direction and control of the Boston public schools. Under his able and efficient supervision the schools grew and prospered. To-day the Boston public school system is referred to as a model school system.

This Wednesday begins the first school year of the reign of George H. Conley, who on September 1st succeeded to the chair from which Edwin P. Seaver was ousted by the action of the School Committee.

A tall, thin, wiry, active man, a scholar, with a keen appreciation of the value of knowledge and the best methods of imparting it to others, enthusiastic, with judgment and tact, George H. Conley, the new superintendent, stimulates others, while he fully appreciates the nerve-racking strain which the teaching of children imposes upon the teachers under his direction. Sympathetic and magnetic to a great degree, the new superintendent holds the confidence of all who know of him or who have had any opportunity of studying his work.

Born in Lowell.

Superintendent Conley was born in Lowell, October 11, 1852, and was educated in the public schools of that city. He later studied in Holy Cross College, Worcester. Following his graduation from that institution, he studied at the seminary of St. Suisplce, in Montreal. A trip to Europe, during which he studied languages and inspected thoroughly the school systems in the leading European countries, followed a year at the Montreal seminary.

He returned to Lowell, and in 1876 was elected principal of the Mann School, Lowell. A few years later he was chosen superintendent of the Lowell schools.

In 1886 Mr. Conley was elected to the Boston Board of Supervisors, and during the eighteen years Mr. Conley has served as a supervisor of the Boston schools, he has demonstrated over again the qualities by which he made himself known while at the head of the Lowell schools.

"No Frills; No Fads."

The new superintendent says that his regime will stand for "no frills and no fads;" simply a common-sense, progressive regime. There will be less specialization and narrowness, and a greater restriction of the elective system.

"There will be more individual contact and influence of teachers with pupils.

"Teachers will not teach a single subject long enough to become narrow.

"Manual training schools are not to produce skilled mechanics, but to assist the student in a fortunate choice of education."

For the first time in fifty-four years the old Dwight Grammar School, on West Springfield street, will open without the rosy-cheeked, smiling face of James A. Page, smiling in greeting at the line of little fellows from the primary schoools, who begin Wednesday their careers in the Dwight Grammar School. Mr. Page entered the school service of this city in 1846, and since 1850 has been master of the Dwight School. This year he retires on half pay for the first year of his retirement.

BEVERLY.

On the other hand, the little city of Beverly, one of the most beautiful spots in America, is in a sad way from an educational standpoint. Never were the conditions in that town more serious than at present. Superintendent Adelbert L. Safford has published an advertisement in the local papers announcing that no new pupils will be admitted to four of the public schools. The citizens have taken the matter up in great seriousness and urge the proper utilization of public money for public education.

SOMERVILLE.

In Somerville there is no immediate relief in sight for the 600 pupils who are now on half-time. Six schools are congested beyond possibility of better accommodation than half-time for many of the pupils. These are the Burns, Morse, Carr, Prescott, Hanscom and Glines. The completion of the new George O. Procter School will afford relief to some of the schools, but will not greatly relieve the entire situation.

CHELSEA.

The High School pupils of Chelsea are looking rather gloomy at the beginning of the new term, for they cannot yet occupy the new High School building on Crescent avenue. A quarter of a million dollars has been expended on this building, and it has been finished and ready for fixtures for several months.

Although returns from the various principals are not complete, it is believed that all the scholars will be accommodated in the four grammar and eight primary schools which opened Wednesday.

REVERE.

At Revere the Committee on Schools reports that there will be ample accommodations for the scholars who return to their studies to-morrow. There are five grammar and six primary schools in the town, and a new one with ten rooms, the Yeaman street school, will be ready for occupancy about the first of November. Two rooms have been fitted in the Town Hall to provide for the pupils who will occupy this school.

LYNN.

Notwithstanding that Lynn has erected an additional school building at a cost of $30,000 during the past year, it is admitted by Superintendent Frank J. Peaslee and the members of the School Committee that there is bound to be a considerable degree of overcrowding. With the opening of the new Bruce School, the Gardiner street and the Burrill primaries will go out of existence. In anticipation of the crowding of pupils, thirty-six movable seats and desks have been placed in the English High School. The registration of pupils in the Classical High School shows a 50 per cent. increase over last year.

WALTHAM.

The estimated enrolment of pupils who will enter the Waltham schools this year is placed at 3,500. Already the School Board has considered the possibility of congested conditions and have made preparaton in the Grammar and High School grades for accommodating an overflow. Principal Eaton of the High School has made arrangements for accommodating 411 students, but this may be increased by 150 on the opening of school.

Superintendent William D. Parkinson states that no apprehension of an overcrowded condition is felt, but if any school is overtaxed, arrangement can be quickly made to distribute the puils and all can be cared for without increased expense.

SALEM.

The public schools in Salem will open Monday morning for the Winter term and the head masters of the different institutions will have a problem before them to locate and seat the large number that wish to enroll.

The conditions at the High School buildings are most wretched, and it is doubtful if their equal can be found in the State. The entering class, which numbers over 200, will be located in the annex. On the other hand, last year's freshman class will be out in the street. In the old school building three classes, composing boys and girls, will be packed in like sardines. Owing to the lack of room several classes are required to go to the annex, some 200 feet away, perhaps several times a day.

The city officials have for years recognized the want of a new building in Salem, and for years the matter has been discussed. The present government has made a step in favor of schools, and competitive plans will soon be produced for a new high school.

CAMBRIDGE.

The schools of Cambridge open Tuesday, and the officials are doing all in their power to provide adequate accommodations.

The children who last year were in the Stearns and Sargent primary schools will be transferred from that crowded section of the city to the new Fletcher School, on Elm street.

It is thought also that the Washington School will be overcrowded because of the large entering class at the Manual Training School. The Washington School is used by the Manual Training School and as a grammar school as well. Last year there were 14,935 pupils in the Cambridge public schools, and an increase of about 250 is looked for this year.

EVERETT.

Owing to the large increase in attendance in the High School of Everett, the spacious halls of the building will be used as class rooms during the coming school year. The halls will have partitions dividing them into class rooms, and about 250 more pupils will be accommodated in this manner.

New quarters have been prepared by the erection of a new grammar school building on Glendale street of twelve rooms, which will relieve any congestion there may be in other districts.

About six thousand pupils are annually enrolled in the Everett schools. There will be an increase of about 500 this year.

WAKEFIELD.

School opened in Wakefield last Wednesday, with a total enrolment of about 2,000 pupils, the largest enrollment in the history of the schools. Every pupil was comfortably situated, for during the summer additions have been made to the buildings.

MELROSE.

Superintendent F. H. Nickerson of the Melrose schools has made arrangements to care for an additional 200 scholars in the public schools. Fully fifty more pupils are expected in the High School this year than last year.

"We have made arrangements to care for any increase there may be," said Mr. Nickerson. "The largest increase will come in the High School and ninth grades. The former has increased from an enrolment of 200 to 500 in the last six years, and if this rate of increase continues we may well look for trouble two years hence."

TO-DAY IS A TIME OF PENITENCE FOR JEWS.

New Year Was Ushered in Yesterday—Prayers Offered for Dr. Lorimer in Synagogues—Immigrants Pray

Yesterday was New Year's Day for the Hebrews. It was a day of prayer, a religious holiday. With one exception it was the most important day of the year to all Hebrews. The exception is Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement. That comes on September 20, and marks the end of the penitential season, which began yesterday.

To-day will be a day of penitence for the orthodox Hebrews. For those of the reformed religion, however, the setting of the sun last night marked the close of the New Year celebrations. In some of the synagogues to-day there will be continued services.

The first day of the Hebrew New Year is known as Rosh Hashonah. At all the synagogues services were held during the day and evening. No faithful Hebrew did any business whatever yesterday. Even the food that the orthodox ate was cooked before sunset of the previous day.

At the Baldwin place synagogue, the Beth Israel, the services were the most largely attended.

Prayed for Lorimer.

In those quarters of the city where the Jew is most in evidence the city had a holiday aspect and the people were dressed in their best. In no section was this outer show of reverence more marked than in the North and West Ends. The transformation from Friday morning activity to the calm dignity of yesterday was almost a revelation, such as an appeal to religious thought alone can bring about among the Jews recently arrived from the ghettos of Europe.

At the Temple Ohabei Shalom an unusual feature was the offering of prayer for the late Dr. Lorimer, for many years at the head of Tremont Temple. In the prayer all of the congregation of about 2,000 joined. Services will be held in this synagogue to-day at 10:30.

In the West End the orthodox Jews garbed themselves in their biblical prayer shawls, whose four corners are a continuous appeal to God to gather home the Jews from all four corners of the world. Their chanting and their reading was in Yiddish, and their services did not contain the beautiful music which characterized the celebrations in the temples on the other side of the city.

At some of the temples it was a day of offerings. In many instances admissions were by ticket only, and these had to be purchased beforehand. The readings in some of the synagogues were by men who had bought the privilege of reading. In this way a number of the congregations secured the funds with which to defray their expenses for the coming year.

The services of the Congregation Adath Israel were elaborate. They were conducted by Rabbi Charles Fleischer. The temple of the Congregation Ohabei Shalom was filled at an early hour.

The new synagogue on Wall street, the Mishkan Tefila congregation, corner of Madison street and Shawmut avenue; Kenesseth Israel congregation, Emerald street; Adath Jeshuran, corner of Blue Hill avenue and Lawrence avenue, and all of the smaller synagogues were crowded.

At orthodox services the principal and the most sacred feature was the blowing of the ram's horn, one of the oldest rituals in the religion. As the Rosh Hashonah fell this year on Saturday, the Hebrew holiday, the ancient custom of blowing the shofar, or ram's horn, was not observed in the orthodox churches.

A feature of the day's observances was the services held by the 150 Hebrew immigrants, who was a rabbi in Russia and who had his robes with him, volunteered to conduct the services. He was assisted by his son David.

It was the first day of the year 5665 in the Jewish calendar.

COUPLE JAILED FOR DEFRAUDING RAILWAY

Eight months in the House of Correction was the sentence meted out yesterday in the Municipal Court on Winifred Brabson, alias Elizabeth Allen and John W. West, alias John Berry, who were convicted of defrauding a street railway company. Both claimed the woman had been hurt in a car of the Warren, Brookfield & Spencer street railway on June 19, and took $25 from the company in settlement. Later it was found the woman was not on the car at the time of the crash.

$50,000,000 to Be Spent for Windy City Improvements and Public Works Heads Want Best in the World

Seven officials of the city of Chicago will arrive in the city in a day or two to inspect the new biolithic pavements, many miles of which have been laid in Boston and other cities of the State. They will remain here several days and will stop at the Somerset as the guests of Warren Bros., manufacturers of the material. Over 1,700 miles of the streets of the Windy City must soon be repaved, and at least $50,000,000 will be spent for this purpose.

Trips will be made about the city in automobiles, and the officials will also visit Springfield, Worcester, Pittsfield, Brockton, Lowell, New Bedford and Cambridge.

Those in the party are Superintendent of Streets Doherty, City Engineer Erickson, Commissioner of Public Works Mineegan, Chief Engineer of Streets Hippell, Engineer of Board of Local Improvement Hill, President Lynch of the local board, and Mr. Kiallassa, member of the Board of Public Works.

STOLE 25 PAIRS OF SHOES, GOES TO JAIL

"I'm a centipede," said Quartermaster John O'Brien, of the Clyde Line steamship Huron, as he walked off with twenty-five pairs of shoes from the Huron's hold.

O'Brien intimated to the court he must have been "temporarily deranged." "Three months in the House of Correction," said the Court.

Determined to Regain Her Lost Office in the Order She Gets Injunction Which Brings Body to Standstill

Special to the Sunday American.

Lowell, Sept. 10.—As the result of the determined efforts of Miss Stella B. Smith, of this city, to regain her lost rank and office in the local tent of the national order of Daughters of Veterans, the entire machinery of that organization, local, State and national, including thousands of members in every part of the United States, is at a standstill. Miss Smith has just obtained three injunctions from the courts which prevent the local, State and national councils from transacting any business until her case has been given a hearing by the courts.

In all of her petitions to the courts asking for the three injunctions named, Miss Smith claims that last December she was elected junior vice-president of the Lowell Tent, and should have been installed in office January 8. Before that date, however, the local tent held a meeting and expelled Miss Smith from the tent, and made it impossible for her to be installed.

Miss Smith then went to the meeting of the State Council of the order, but was refused admittance by the sentinels at the door of the hall. Next the young woman came to Boston during G. A. R. week and presented her case to the National Council of the order, but her claims were not approved.

Miss Smith then appealed to the veterans themselves, and made a personal plea to the Executive Council of the G. A. R. then meeting in Boston. Here her claim was approved, and the veterans recommended that Miss Smith be restored to her full rights as an officer and member of the organization. The National Council of the Daughters of Veterans refused to do this. She then resorted to the courts.

FOOD AND REST GIVE STARVING WOMAN NEW COURAGE.

Miss Beatrice Lyons, Found Partially Conscious in Franklin Park, Says She Will Fight Life's Battle and Earn Her Way

Two square meals and a night's comfortable rest prepared Miss Beatrice Lyons to resume the arduous toil that has made up her life, in spite of the fact that she had been exposed to the cold rain for three days and nights in Franklin Park, and she left the Chardon Street Home yesterday morning to go to friends. She declares that she will earn her way.

"I had lain down to die," she said to a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter in explanation of her condition when she was found by the police only partially conscious. "I did not know that I was in a public park, but I should not have cared anyway. I was not suffering then; I had gone through too much. I only wanted to lie down and rest. I suppose I would have died if the officers had not found me. And I believe that I wanted to die when I went into the park.

"I did not mind the rain or the cold at all. I was not hungry. I had been through those stages and did not care about anything any more. I supposed that I had no friend left on earth. I had been through so many troubles and had been left alone that I was tired of living. No, I would not commit suicide, but I was ready and glad when the thought came into my head that I was going to die this time."

Miss Lyons is fifty-six years old, and her face shows that she has been through more troubles than come to the average mortal. She was found only partially conscious in Franklin Park by Policeman Dupee, of the park police, Friday night. She had sought the shade of a tree, and when night fell with rain she was sheltered somewhat. Her clothese were covered with mud and she was in a pitiable condition. Starvation and cold, with the general results of exposure, had completely broken her.

9,000 Kilometres in Europe

By Bruno Lessing

Every motorist possesses the desire, and many the hope, of some day "Doing the Continent" in a motor car.

Bruno Lessing, in September MOTOR, writes in a most interesting manner of "9,000 Kilometres in Europe"—a tour which he accomplished the past summer, visiting France, Italy, Switzerland, Germany, Holland and Belgium.

His journey may be just the one that suits your fancy--at any rate, it is well worth the reading.
